MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 88. An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3318. An act to allow the entry and clearance of vessels at San Luis Obispo, Port Harford, and Monterey, Cal.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 88. An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM RESERVE.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15085) to set apart certain lands in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the "Battle Mountain Sanitarium Reserve," which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15085) to set apart certain lands in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the "Battle Mountain Sanitarium Reserve."

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby reserved from settlement, entry, sale, or other disposal all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land lying and being situate in the State of South Dakota and within the boundaries particularly described as follows: Beginning at the southwest corner of section 18, township 7 south, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian; thence east to the southeast corner of said section 18; thence south to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of section 20; thence east to the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of section 21; thence north to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 9; thence west to the center of section 7; thence south to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 7; thence west to the northwest corner of section 18; thence south to the place of beginning, all in township 7 south, range 6 east, Black Hills meridian, in Fall River County, S. Dak.: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect any valid rights acquired in connection with any of the lands embraced within the limits of said reserve.

SEC. 2. That said reserve shall be known as the "Battle Mountain Sanitarium Reserve," and shall be under the exclusive control of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in connection with the Battle Mountain Sanitarium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., whose duty it shall be to prescribe such rules and regulations and establish such service as they may deem necessary for the care and management of the same.

SEC. 3. That in all cases of unperfected bona fide claims lying within the said boundaries of said reserve, which claims have been properly initiated prior to September 2, 1902, said claims may be perfected upon compliance with the requirements of the laws respecting settlement, residence, improvements, etc., in the same manner in all respects as claims are perfected to other Government lands: Provided, That to the extent that the lands within said reserve are held in private ownership the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to exchange therefor public lands of like area and value, which are surveyed, vacant, unappropriated, not mineral, not timbered, and not required for reservoir sites or other public uses or purposes. The private owners must, at their expense and by appropriate instruments of conveyance, surrender to the Government a full and unencumbered right and title to the private lands included in any exchange before patents are issued for or any rights attach to the public lands included therein, and no charge of any kind shall be made for issuing such patents. Upon completion of any exchange the lands surrendered to the Government shall become a part of said reserve in a like manner as if they had been public lands at the time of the establishment of said reserve. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the issuance of any land scrip, and the State of South Dakota is granted the privilege of selecting from the public lands in said State an equal quantity of land in lieu of such portions of section 16 included within said reserve as have not been sold or disposed of by said State and are not covered by an unperfected bona fide claim as above mentioned.

SEC. 4. That all persons who shall unlawfully intrude upon said reserve, or who shall without permission appropriate any object therein or commit unauthorized injury or waste in any form whatever upon the lands or other public property therein, or who shall violate any of the rules and regulations prescribed hereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum not more than $1,000, or be imprisoned for a period not more than twelve months, or shall suffer both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to make some explanation of what it is.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, the Government at the present time is constructing what is known as "the Battle Mountain Sanitarium," a branch of the National Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, S. Dak. Contiguous to it there it a natural object of considerable historic interest known as "Battle Mountain." It so happens that the lands including that mountain are not valuable for agricultural purposes and they have remained unoccupied for years, and the purpose of this bill is simply to reserve from sale certain lands embracing that natural monument and lands contiguous for the purpose of scenic beauty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the title pass under this bill from the Government?

Mr. MARTIN. No; it is retained by the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the object of the penalty at the foot of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN. That simply provides for the custody of this reservation, which is placed in the hands of the Board of Managers of the National Home, and is a provision against trespassing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the object of the bill is to create a public national park?

Mr. MARTIN. It could hardly be designated as a national park. It is a reserve for its scenic beauty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does this bill contemplate any further charge upon the Government?

Mr. MARTIN. It does not at present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I call from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12320) to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for prior years, and for other purposes. The report was published in the RECORD on February 19, 1906. There is a complete agreement. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with and that the statement be read in place thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read in place thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12320) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 20, 24, 25, 31, 35, 36, 37, and 61.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 22, 23, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 58½, 59, and 60; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add after the word "years," at the end of said amendment, the following: ", but if her death shall occur during this period this provision shall terminate;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the office of captain of engineers in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States is hereby abolished from the date of the death of the late incumbent thereof, and that on and after the passage of this act the President may select and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a chief engineer of said Service who has served not less than three years in that grade as Engineer in Chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service for a period of four years, and no longer unless reappointed or sooner retired by reason of age or disability: And provided further, That the Engineer in Chief thus appointed shall thereafter receive the rank, pay, and allowances, while holding said appointment, that are now or may hereafter be prescribed for a captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service, but nothing herein shall operate to increase the number of chief engineers now in the Revenue-Cutter Service;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 15 of the bill, in line 20, after the word "herein," insert the words "and hereinafter;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "cents," at the end of said amendment, insert the following: ", to be paid from the appropriations herein made for the isthmian canal;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "cents," at the end of said amendment, insert the following: ", to be paid from the appropriations herein made for the isthmian canal;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from the matter inserted by said Senate amendment the word "presenting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "transmitting;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "Grounds," in line 7 of said amendment, insert the following: "Under the supervision of the Commission on the Senate office building created by the sundry civil act, approved April twenty-eighth, nineteen hundred and four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment, after the word "cents," insert the following: "From the appropriations for the support of the Flandreau Indian School for the fiscal year nineteen hundred and four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the employment of three hundred additional clerks, with compensation at the rate of six hundred dollars per annum, in post-offices of the first and second classes during the fiscal year nineteen hundred and six, sixty thousand dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Additional, to meet the demands for more meat inspection and for microscopic inspection of pork, sixty-three thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 of said amendment strike out the name "Peter Riley" and insert in lieu thereof the name "Peter Reily;" and the Senate agree to the same.

LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
JAMES A. TAWNEY,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House, at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12320) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying report, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, under the State Department: Appropriates $1,033.33, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $512.58, as proposed by the House, to pay amounts certified to be due on account of bringing home criminals, and strikes out appropriations proposed by the Senate of $30,000 for contingent expenses of foreign missions, $40,000 for contingent expenses of United States consulates, $20,000 for payment to Germany for losses incurred in connection with disturbances in Samoa in 1899, and $760 for payment to Denmark for claims for losses incurred in connection with the disturbances in Samoa in 1899.

On amendment numbered 6: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, placing Cora B. Thomas on the rolls of the Treasury Department as a clerk of class 3 for a period of not exceeding five years.

On amendment numbered 7: Appropriates $91,300, as proposed by the House, instead of $79,300, as proposed by the Senate, for furniture for public buildings.

On amendment numbered 8: Strikes out the appropriation of $12,000 proposed by the Senate for fuel, lights, and water for public buildings.

On amendments numbered 9 and 10: Authorizes the transfer of $5,000 from the appropriation for construction of the wharf for the quarantine station at Honolulu, Hawaii, to the appropriation for the runway to connect the wharf with the island.

On amendment numbered 11: Appropriates $20,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the reclamation of Quarantine Island, Hawaii.

On amendment numbered 12: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate providing for the appointment of an Engineer in Chief, for a term of four years, from the number of chief engineers in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

On amendments numbered 13, 14, 15, and 16: Inserts the provisions proposed by the Senate to settle the accounts of the disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department, the same involving no appropriation of money out of the Treasury.

On amendment numbered 17: Appropriates $650,000, as proposed by the Senate, to be used as an advance to the Panama Railroad Company to pay for the reequipment of that company, the same to be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the proceeds of the sale of the isthmian canal bonds.

On amendments numbered 18 and 19: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, to pay Lieut. Col. William M. Black $1,285.32 and to Lieut. Mark Brooke $573.98, being additional to their regular pay in the Army, for services rendered to the Isthmian Canal Commission on the Isthmus of Panama.

On amendment numbered 20: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $15,550 for repairs to the Soldiers' Home at Togus, Me.

On amendments numbered 21, 22, and 23: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill and appropriates $6,478.57, as proposed by the Senate, to pay amounts found due on account of "Pay, miscellaneous," of the Navy.

On amendments numbered 24 and 25: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the diversion of certain appropriations for the Naval War College in Rhode Island.

On amendment numbered 26: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate extending the limit of cost for the heating, lighting, and power plant for the Capitol and other buildings.

On amendment numbered 27: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the construction of a subway system between the Capitol building and the Senate office building.

On amendment numbered 28: Requires that one-half of the expenditure for tuition of colored deaf mutes of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

On amendment numbered 29: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the payment of $843.60 to John H. Roberts out of the appropriation for the Flandreau Indian school and on account of beef furnished said school.

On amendment numbered 30: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate appropriating $75,000 for expenses of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.

On amendment numbered 31: Strikes out the appropriation of $2,615, proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous expenditures of the Department of Justice.

On amendments numbered 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, and 37, under the Post-Office Department: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $200 for the purchase of a draft horse; $60,000 for temporary clerks, at $600 each, and $15,000 for blanks, etc., for the money-order service, and strikes out the appropritaion of $5,000 to reimburse the postmasters at Tonopah and Goldfield, Nev.; $63.50 for the relief of the acting postmaster at Nome, Alaska, and $188.63 for the relief of the postmaster at Nome, Alaska.

On amendment numbered 38: Appropriates $63,000, instead of $20,000 as proposed by the House and $135,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the Bureau of Animal Industry, in the Department of Agriculture.

On amendments numbered 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49: Inserts various appropriations proposed by the Senate for certain expenses on account of that body.

On amendments numbered 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, and 60: Inserts provisions proposed by the Senate to pay additional judgments of the Court of Claims, judgments in Indian depredation claims, and awards of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission which have been certified to Congress since the passage of the bill by the House.

On amendment numbered 61: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission to fix and determine the fees in cases tried by said Commission.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $16,273,622.86, being $1,061,885.42 more than as it passed the House and $186,177.13 less than as it passed the Senate.

LUCIUS N. LITTAUER,
JAMES A. TAWNEY,
LEONIDAS F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman what is done in reference to the increased appropriation to the Agricultural Department for the inspection of meat?

Mr. LITTAUER. The appropriation as it passed the House was $20,000. The Senate inserted a general provision for $135,000, which we have reduced, under the same verbiage as it passed the House, to $63,000, so that undoubtedly ample provision is made for all the necessities not only for meat inspection, but for the general purposes of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. MANN. What was done with the amendment inserted by the Senate appropriating a certain amount for a deficiency for the Post-Office Department?

Mr. LITTAUER. The sum was left the same as the amount inserted by the Senate, so that provision was made for a certain number of clerks at a certain salary.

Mr. MANN. I think there is nothing in the conference report in reference to the Indian works.

Mr. LITTAUER. None whatever. The only item for Indian affairs is respecting the Five Civilized Tribes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NORTH CAROLINA ARCHIVES IN POSSESSION OF STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a Senate joint resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 26) providing for the return of certain archives now in possession of the Department of State to the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to withdraw from the files of the Department of State and deliver to the State of North Carolina purely "State archives," bearing date from 1750 to 1800, with a few of a later date, and including copies of letters from the Delegates to the Continental Congress, State militia papers, papers relating to the rebuilding of the State capitol, and papers of a like local character: Provided, That no papers commonly called "Confederate archives," or any original papers belonging to the records of the Continental Congress or needed for the uses of the Government shall be delivered, under the provisions hereof, to said State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to make some explanation of this.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I think the best explanation will be the reading of the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 26) providing for the return of certain archives now in possession of the Department of State to the State of North Carolina, have had the same under consideration and report it back without amendment.

The joint resolution was referred to the Secretary of State for his opinion relative to its passage. His reply is attached hereto.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 8, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, inclosing a copy of joint resolution No. 26, providing for the return of certain North Carolina archives now in the possession of this Department, and asking the opinion of the Department relative to its passage.

In reply I have to inform you that the papers in question are purely "State archives," bearing dates from 1750 to 1800, with a few of a later date, and including copies of letters from the delegates to the Continental Congress, State militia papers, papers relating to the rebuilding of the State capitol, and papers of a like local character, but do not contain what are commonly called "Confederate archives" nor any original papers belonging to the records of the Continental Congress.

The resolution as introduced follows the precedent already established by the Department relative to the surrender of its papers and protects the Department in that it is discretionary with the Secretary of State as to what papers are "not needed for the use of the Department of State."

I am therefore of opinion that the resolution should be passed in its present form.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ELIHU ROOT.

Hon. GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
Chairman Committee on the Library, United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING ASSIGNMENT OF PAY OF TEACHERS AND OTHER EMPLOYEES OF THE BUREAU OF EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

Mr. KLEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 97) authorizing assignment of pay of teachers and other employees of the Bureau of Education in Alaska.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit teachers and other employees of the United States Bureau of Education employed in Alaska to make assignments of their pay, under such regulations as he may prescribe, during such time as they may be in the employ of the Bureau of Education in Alaska; and the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to reimburse school-teachers in Alaska for expenses incurred by them in the discharge of their duties and paid from their personal funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KLEPPER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. HULL, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14397—the Army appropriation bill—Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in what I have to say, I shall not refer to the pending bill. I want to call attention briefly to a subject that is of considerable importance not only in my own State, but also in the States and Territories having Indian population.

In South Dakota we have about 20,000 Indians, a larger number than any other State in the Union. They are mostly located in that portion of the State west of the Missouri River, with the exception of the Sisseton, the Yankton, and Crow Creek, who are located east of the river. For some time I have been observing these Indians, and have been astounded at the extent to which tuberculosis is prevalent among them. An investigation discloses that this disease is general among all the several tribes in my State to an alarming extent. During the past year I obtained much definite information on the subject and concluded that it ought to be brought to the attention of Congress, with a view to some action being taken for the purpose of caring for and treating these wards of the nation, and to check, if possible, this dread disease.

Upon reaching Washington, early in December last, I was very much pleased to note that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his last annual report had made reference to the subject of tuberculosis among the Indians generally, and suggested or recommended the establishment of a sanitarium school somewhere in the Southwest where Indian children could be treated and cared for who were afflicted with this disease, and I would like to read from his report on this subject, under the head of "An Indian sanitarium," the following:

Besides the danger of undermining the moral health of wholesome-minded children by introducing the unwholesome-minded freely among them, it seems to me that we are making a mistake in not establishing somewhere—preferably in the Southwest—a school for children suffering from tuberculosis, the disease which is more generally disseminated than any other among the Indians. In their own homes these little ones can have no sort of sanitary surroundings and only in rare instances proper medical care. The most stringent rules, moreover, which the Office of Indian Affairs can prescribe for the protection of healthy children from perilous contact with those who have been stricken are bound to be only partly effective, for though we may weed every sign of the scourge out of the schools by excluding all children pronounced by the examining physician unsound, we are only segregating these in order to make them grow up, if they do grow up, in ignorance. The establishment of such a sanitarium as I have here suggested would insure to the unfortunates the special care and the chance for recuperation which is their due, as well as the schooling needed to fit them for the serious business of life, instead of being sent home to serve as centers of infection for both their own people and the whites of the neighborhood.

Realizing that in South Dakota, where there are so many Indians, it would be more or less cruel to separate those afflicted with tuberculosis from their parents and families by removing them to a remote part of the country, as would be the case if they were taken to a sanitarium somewhere in the Southwest, as suggested by the Commissioner, I introduced in the early part of this session H. R. 8986, for the establishment of a sanitarium at or near the city of Pierre, or Fort Pierre, in my own State. The location is particularly desirable, first, because of geographical situation, being centrally located and accessible to all of the different Indian reservations in the State, and, secondly, because of being on the Missouri River, where the best drinking water in the world is obtainable, and where artesian water can be secured, which is specially beneficial, both for bathing and healthful purposes. The altitude is high and the climate particularly favorable to persons affected with tuberculosis or other lung diseases.

If this bill should become a law, the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to select a location at one of the cities above mentioned, and would probably select a location on the west side of the Missouri River, near Fort Pierre, as the conditions on that side of the river are better adapted and more suitable for such an institution than on the east side of the river.

The Indian appropriation bill, reported yesterday, contains a provision authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to investigate and report to Congress upon the advisability of establishing a sanitarium for the treatment of such Indians as are afflicted with tuberculosis and to report upon the location and the cost thereof, and, as far as possible, to report the extent of the prevalence of said disease among Indians.

In view of this provision it is probable that no further action will be taken in this session of Congress, but by the next session I am in hopes that we will possess information, by reason of what the Commissioner will report, that will justify action, not only in establishing an institution in South Dakota, but such other institutions in other parts of the United States as may be necessary to properly care for and treat Indians suffering or affected with this disease.

I would say that my bill provides for the using of funds in the Treasury belonging to the Sioux Indians for the purpose of equipping and maintaining a sanitarium, limited to the Sioux Indians in North and South Dakota, and I know of no better use that can be made of a portion of the Indians' money than for this purpose, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have both taken that view of it; and in order to show just what they say and also for the purpose of bringing this important subject to the attention of this House and to the country I will read a report made to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in response to a request for a report on the bill introduced by me, to which I have before referred.

The said reports are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 31, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, inclosing copy of H. R. 8986, being "A bill for the establishment of an Indian sanitarium or school at or near Pierre, or Fort Pierre, in the State of South Dakota," and in reply thereto I inclose herewith copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 26th instant, submitting a report on this bill, and the views expressed by him have my approval.

In relation to that part of your letter in which you request my opinion as to the advisability of using the interest on the permanent fund in the Treasury belonging to the Sioux Nation, as proposed in section 2 of the bill, I desire to call your attention to section 3 of the act of January 19, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 721), which provides for the division of the principal of the permanent fund under section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, dividing a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, and for other purposes, which states that it shall be divided in proportion to the number of Indians "entitled to receive rations and annuities upon the separate reservations created by the above act, or residing and belonging thereupon at the time the said act took effect, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall carry the amount of the principal of said permanent fund belonging to the Indians of each of the diminished reservations to the credit of the Indians of each of the said diminished reservations, separate and distinct from each other. The principal, as well as the interest of each of said funds shall be expended for the purposes specified in said article 17 of the above-mentioned act only for the use and benefit of the said Indians so entitled to receive rations and annuities upon each of the said separate diminished reservations or so residing and belonging thereupon," and concur in the views of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the advisability, for the purposes of this bill, to use the sum of $25,000 of the interest of the permanent fund of the Sioux Indians.

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 26, 1906.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference, of a communication from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, inclosing copy of bill (H. R. 8986) providing for the establishment of a school or sanitarium for Indians affected with tuberculosis at or near Pierre or Fort Pierre, in South Dakota. This bill provides as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire a site and cause to be erected thereon suitable buildings for the establishment of a school or sanitarium for Indians affected with tuberculosis or other similar disease or diseases, and properly equip the same, at or near the city of Pierre or Fort Pierre, in the State of South Dakota. That when said school or sanitarium is erected and equipped the same shall be under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make all necessary rules and regulations for the government and management thereof: Provided, That the only Indians eligible for admission to said school or sanitarium shall belong to some one of the tribes of Sioux Indians in North and South Dakota, as defined in the act providing for a division of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations, approved March 2, 1889.

"SEC. 2. That the said school or sanitarium shall be erected and equipped at a cost of not to exceed $50,000, of which amount $25,000 is hereby appropriated, and in addition thereto the Secretary of the Interior is directed to use not to exceed $25,000 of the interest on the permanent fund in the Treasury to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians, as provided in section 17 of the act above referred to, approved proved March 2, 1889."

In reply to your request for consideration, I would respectfully report as follows:

The prevalence of tuberculosis among the Indians is a matter of grave concern. While investigations made by this Office reveal an alarming situation, it is probably only in particular localities where the scourge is worse among the Indians than among whites under similar conditions. A campaign of education has begun among our own people, and if it be necessary for them, it is at least as important for our Indians. In their own camps and cabins they do not have the sanitary conveniences of a modern civilized home, and one consumptive may become, through ignorance, a source of infection to numberless other persons.

In my annual report I urged the necessity for the establishment "somewhere—preferably in the Southwest—of a school for children suffering from tuberculosis, the disease which is more generally disseminated than any other among the Indians." I invited the attention of Congress and of the country to the desirability of early taking action for the purpose of organizing intelligent forces to prevent, if possible, the further extension of the disease among the Indians and the whites who surround them.

In answer to the request of Chairman SHERMAN for "the number of Sioux Indians in North and South Dakota," the latest census reports give 23,633.

Mr. SHERMAN also asks "to what extent tuberculosis is prevalent among said Indians."

In a recent report by Dr. Joseph R. Walker, agency physician at Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., a number of statistical tables were given, from which it appears that in 1905 the full-blood Indian population of the reservation was 4,875, among whom there were 561 cases of consumption during the year, of which 172 were new cases, 104 recoveries, and 109 deaths. The mixed-blood population was 1,822. Among these there were 54 cases of tuberculosis, of which 22 were new, 13 recoveries, and 6 deaths.

The statistics for ten years, from 1896 to 1906, give 903 deaths from tuberculosis among the Indians and 70 deaths among the mixed bloods.

The long service of Doctor Walker at Pine Ridge and his interest in this subject have enabled him to prepare tables unavailable at other reservations, but I assume that the ratio shown at Pine Ridge approximately would hold at the other Sioux reservations of North and South Dakota.

Mr. Sherman asks "as to the necessity and advisability of the establishment of an institution as proposed by said bill." I would refer to the reasons expressed in my annual report, that a sanitarium school for Indians affected with tuberculosis is of vital importance to these people, but as to the location of such a school at Pierre, in South Dakota, I am not sufficiently advised about climatic conditions or the opinions of experts as to its availability for such a purpose. If climatic conditions are favorable for combating this disease when supplemented with scientific treatment and instruction, I should like to consider a site at Pierre. Hence, before expressing an opinion on so important a subject, I prefer to give the proposition a more thorough investigation in all of its aspects.

Concerning the equipment of such an institution, it would depend upon the character of the buildings and extent of its accommodations, but I assume that it would not exceed the cost of the average nonreservation Indian school. An appropriation of $50,000 for a modern training school, with its appliances, would give accommodations approximately for 75 or 100 pupils, and the annual cost of maintenance would be about $167 per capita. Possibly, however, for an Indian sanitarium larger salaries would be necessary for employees and more choice and expensive food for the pupils, which would increase the per capita expenditure for maintenance beyond that of the average Indian school. On the other hand, if the plan pursued in modern sanitariums for the treatment of this disease under favorable climatic conditions is adopted, the usual substantial buildings provided for regular Indian schools would be unnecessary. If the school were placed in the deserts of the Southwest, in the arid or semiarid regions, tents could be used almost entirely for dormitory purposes, but in the climate of Pierre comfortable buildings would be required also.

As to the advisability of using for the purposes of this bill any of the interest of the fund of the Sioux Indians now in the Treasury, my judgment is that it could not be applied to a more deserving object. Whatever efforts are made by Congress and the Department for reducing the dangers from tuberculosis among the Indians is of as much importance to their white neighbors as to the Indians themselves, and the money would be well invested wherever it came from.

Very respectfully,

F. E. LEUPP, Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, we have now under consideration the bill (H. R. 14397) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907. The Chaplain, in his invocation to-day, referred to the first President of the United States. He referred to the country incidentally and its great growth. More than one hundred years have passed since the first President took the oath of office. At that time there were in the neighborhood of four and a half million of people who composed the thirteen States. The great Commonwealth of Illinois, that I help to represent in part on the floor of this House, has more people within its limits than the United States had when it started out as a Republic. In looking at the number of persons under the immediate control and direction of the Executive of the United States I find that he has a force of more than 475,000 people.

In the classified service branch of the Government, in the competitive and noncompetitive branches, there are over 300,000 employed. The Army contributes 60,000, the Navy and the Marine Corps contribute 45,000 more, and the postmasters, large and small, add 70,000 more, making in all more than 475,000 who hold their offices and are subject to the control and under the direction of the Chief Executive of the United States. In this number I have not included the attorneys-general, the marshals, the assistant attorneys, the deputy marshals, the consular service, and those engaged in the Isthmian Canal Commission and in the service incident to that great work. There could be readily added to the 475,000 25,000 more, making a grand total of at least 500,000 people under the control of the Executive of the United States. Truly did the Chaplain say that this country had grown in importance and greatness since he who was the first President occupied that position. Now, under our Constitution our form of Government is divided into three parts—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. It is our business to prepare and formulate legislation. The President joins with us to the extent of approving or disapproving legislation. If the legislation which we pass in this body and in the joint body—the Congress—that is approved by the President should be unconstitutional, there is another branch of the Government to pass upon that question. Fellow-Members, the Executive is clothed with great authority. In his hand is placed the money, and under his direction are the officers to carry out the appropriations of the Congress. The law requires that at the opening of each session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury shall present to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in conformity to law, a statement showing the estimate of appropriations required for the service for the fiscal year ending next following the submission of the letter.

A letter of that purport was presented by Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary, of date December 4, 1905, directed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Estimates were made for different purposes. Estimates were made for the appropriations necessary for the carrying on of the military affairs of this Government. It may be that Congress appropriates perhaps more than it ought to appropriate. We receive the directions for the appropriations we are called upon to make, not from Congress, but from the Executive branch of the Government, separate and distinct from us. It is asking too much, it is expecting too much that the Chief Executive, with 500,000 different officeholders under his direction, as I have enumerated, should personally know, should be able to find out what is needed by the different Departments to carry on the work of this great Government of ours.

But, my fellow-Members, the men that are in those Departments under the Executive have taken a like oath with us, and in conscience they are as liable as we are for the proper handling of the funds that we have placed in their hands as a part of the Government. If these executive officers ask for more money than they ought to, their conscience should govern them as much as our conscience should govern us in the passing of bills of this kind. If they ask for more money than they ought to receive, and we give to them more money than we ought to give that money is held by them in trust. It is a trust fund that belongs to the people, and they should economically, justly, and honestly care for the funds that are placed in their hands; and if there be an overplus that should be turned back into the Treasury to be used as a common fund later on to be appropriated by Congress in its due course of administration. I do not agree with the criticism that goes through the country that the legislative branch is given to extravagant appropriations, nor do I agree with the criticism that the Executive should be held responsible for many appropriations that are called for in the different branches of the Government. As I have said, it is too much to expect of him to know, in the multitude of services and duties that fall upon him here and elsewhere and in the discharge of those duties, to fully understand all of these estimates.

We have, as members of the Military Committee, irrespective of party affiliations, sought to do our duty under our oaths in preparing this measure and making appropriations for the military establishment of this Government. Under the guide of our chairman we have sought to make every appropriation that was necessary for this great branch and arm of the Government. We desire to do everything in our power to make efficient the Army of the greatest country on the face of the earth. We want to do everything in our power to advance the health and the comfort of the officers and men connected with the military establishment.

But there are some things that are going on even in the military establishment with which some of us can not fully agree, and for that reason we think the country ought to know something with reference to what is going on in that branch. Some of you will perhaps remember that about a year ago I discussed on the floor of this House the question of the retirement of officers. It was then suggested, by many questions propounded to me, if we had offered any solution to that problem? The Military Committee this year in their bill has offered a partial solution, as best we can, for the settlement of the problem of retiring officers as they have heretofore been retired, as will be disclosed by facts set forth by me to this committee.

On the 1st of December, 1905, I find that there are on the retired list 903 officers, ranging from the rank and grade of lieutenant-general down to that of a second lieutenant. These retired officers are receiving $2,700,000—an average of $3,000 each. I do not wish to appear here as criticising these officers; I do not wish to appear here as criticising the amount that they receive; but I do criticise the system by which it is possible for us to have so many officers on the retired list as we have to-day.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is the gentleman willing to repeat what he has said in regard to the number of officers retired and the amount paid to them? The data is very interesting.

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir. The number on the retired list on December 1, 1905, was 903. The pay for the retired officers was $2,700,000, an average of $3,000 apiece.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state the number of officers in each grade, if he has that information?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir; I will state in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] the number of each grade, the operation of law by which they were retired, and all the facts pertaining thereto as a part of my speech and have it printed in the RECORD. However, if the gentleman desires to have it read, I can read it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will put it into the RECORD——

Mr. PARKER. Please read it.

Mr. PRINCE (reading)—

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PRINCE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Has the gentleman made any comparison with previous years to see whether the number has increased or not as the years go by?

Mr. PRINCE. I can answer to the gentleman the numbers are increasing. The Army has increased. Prior to the Spanish war the Army was 25,000; the Army is now 60,000. That would account for some increase on the retired list.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Since the increase in the Army and the increase in the number of officers and men in the Army has the number of retired officers continued to increase? We made the increase what year?

Mr. PRINCE. About 1901.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Since 1901 has the number of retired officers continued to increase year by year?

Mr. PRINCE. It has.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. If the gentleman will allow me. Your analysis shows that the largest number of retired officers are of the grade of brigadier-general, and the next largest number are of the grade of major. Is there any reason why these two grades should have so much larger proportion of officers on the retired list than any other? If so, why?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not think so, except on the ground of favoritism.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will allow me, in the line of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, I desire to state that since the reorganization of the Army there has been a larger increase of retired officers on account of the action of Congress and the action of the Executive in promoting and retiring a large number of officers who have civil war records. That might account for one part of the large increase.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Amounting to about 250?

Mr. PRINCE. I understand so.

Mr. HULL. I have not examined it, but the gentleman from Illinois has gone over the matter carefully, and can probably answer you.

Mr. PRINCE. The statement shows under what law they are retired. That gives it fully. In looking over the records on the Army Register I find this: That from the organization of the Government down to the present time we have had four Generals of the Army—Washington, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan. From the organization of the Government down to 1888 we had but four Lieutenant-Generals—Washington, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan. The Revolutionary war produced but one Lieutenant-General. The war of 1812 did not produce a Lieutenant-General. General Scott received the rank of Brevet Lieutenant-General. No Indian war produced a Lieutenant-General. The great Mexican war, that added so much territory to our country, produced no Lieutenant-General. Since Sheridan became Lieutenant-General he has had five successors, three of whom are now on the retired list. The civil war, in which more than 3,000,000 men were engaged, in which 4,500 battles were fought, large and small, produced but one Lieutenant-General.

Mr. HULL. Only one?

Mr. PRINCE. Only one.

Mr. HULL. How about Sherman and Sheridan—they succeeded?

Mr. PRINCE. It produced but one.

Mr. HULL. As a result?

Mr. PRINCE. Afterwards. Let me read: Washington became Lieutenant-General July 3, 1798; retired December 14, 1799. Grant became Lieutenant-General March 2, 1864; retired July 25, 1866. After the war was over.

Mr. HULL. As a result of the war?

Mr. PRINCE. As a result, surely, of the war. Mr. Sherman became Lieutenant-General July 25, 1866; retired March 4, 1869. Sheridan became Lieutenant-General March 4, 1869; retired June 1, 1888. Schofield became Lieutenant-General February 8, 1895; retired September 29, 1895. Miles became Lieutenant-General June 6, 1900, and retired August 8, 1903. Young became Lieutenant-General August 8, 1903; retired January 9, 1904. Chaffee became Lieutenant-General January 9, 1904, and retired the 1st of February, 1906. General Bates is now Lieutenant-General. In looking at the Army list——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman is on this branch of the discussion—I understand he is discussing the question of officers connected with the War Department and the Army—I would be very glad to know if he can state how many offices are created, and the amount of the salaries attached thereto, as included in this bill. How much does this bill pending before the committee increase the personnel and the charge upon the Treasury?

Mr. PRINCE. It reduces it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am very glad to know that, because in your bill of 1905 you increased it $52,940. Now, if I understand, you decrease it in this bill?

Mr. HULL. We increased it for officers for present current year. What officers did we provide for in the bill of 1905?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The offices increased in 1905 amounted, in the aggregate, to $58,540.

Mr. HULL. Clerks?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not know what they were.

Mr. HULL. I do not think we increased officers outside of clerks and noncommissioned officers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I wanted to get at the charge on the Treasury. I do not care whether they are of the enlisted force. I wanted to know how much your present bill increases the charge on the Treasury as compared with yast year. In your last bill the increase, taking the number of offices, 5,600—that is the charge for offices omitted—and deducting that from the very large number of offices created with salaries of $58,540 made a net increase of $52,940. What I want to get at it, does your bill make any net increase of charge on the Treasury or does it result in a net decrease?

Mr. PRINCE. I think we have increased the number of clerks somewhat.

Mr. HULL. But we have reduced the total amount by the pay of the Lieutenant-General, which more than offsets the increases. But that provision is subject to a point of order.

Mr. PRINCE. My recollection is (I was sick while the bill was under consideration in the committee, but I have read it since) that we have added some clerks to the force necessarily, because the Government is increasing and the business of the country is enlarging; but if you mean whether we have added commissioned officers to the force of the present military establishment, I do not think we have added any. I do not just catch the point.

Mr. HULL. We have reduced instead of enlarging.

Mr. PRINCE. We added to the noncommissioned officers last year, and we have added some clerks for the Chief of Staff.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My inquiry is not directed to the particular offices; but if it would not be too much trouble for the gentleman to get it for us, I would like to have him be prepared to give us, at some time during the progress of the debate on the bill, the amount of the charge upon the Treasury in connection with offices created as compared with such offices as may be omitted. I have the analysis of the bill of last year, and the increase in the bill for 1905——

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield I will say to the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. PRINCE. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HULL. That the increase in the bill this year is for some clerks for division and department headquarters. Last year there was some increase in electrical noncommissioned officers of the Signal Corps and artillery, and some others of the noncommissioned force of the Army, but none in the commissioned force. I will say, further, that the committee this year have submitted to the House a proposition for the abolition of the grade of Lieutenant-General, which will reduce the total expense of officers as a charge upon the Treasury, in my judgment. There is an increase in the Philippine Islands in the organization of the scouts of certain adjutants and quartermasters, on account of the battalion formation, but it is an increase already authorized by existing law, and is not in any sense legislation by the committee this year to create those positions. The gentleman will understand that under existing law they can organize all the scouts—the 5,000—into battalions and regimental formation, and when so organized the organization of the Army provides that each battalion of each regiment shall have certain staff officers. The captain and below may be selected from the noncommissioned force of the Regular Army, and while so serving they get the pay of commissioned officers. Heretofore these scouts have been largely company organizations. As peace is established in the islands they are being drawn into battalion and regimental formations, which will cause an increase of pay for officers in that particular. I have not analyzed how much it would be, but that is easily done.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I fully appreciate the significance of the chairman's explanation, and I do not want to be understood as criticising the committee, but I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that we have, under a statute passed in 1888, an analysis made by the clerk of the Appropriations Committee on the part of the House and the Finance Committee on the part of the Senate, giving the number of offices omitted and the salaries attached thereto, and the number of offices created and the salaries attached thereto in the various appropriation bills. Now, the balance of offices created and salaries attached thereto for 1905, after deducting the offices omitted and the salaries attached thereto, was nearly ten million and a half of money, and I have been trying to find out by the clerks of those committees and by men on these various committees how it is that we continually make these increases. I have not the slightest question but that the chairman of this committee and all the members of the committee have exercised their very best discretion and judgment; but it seems to me that in some way and somewhere, in some spot, we ought to be able to stop this continual increase. Your committee may not be subject to any criticism, and what I should like to know—I do not want to embarrass the chairman of the committee, of course——

Mr. HULL. It does not embarrass me at all. I am only taking up the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. That is all right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But if the chairman could do it without too much trouble, I think it would be instructive to the Committee of the Whole if he could give us a summary of the results in this particular bill so that we could have an intelligent judgment as to whether we were contributing to this what seems to be an abnormally large general increase. I am ready to vote for anything that is necessary, and I have no question that the chairman of the committee would not favor anything he did not think necessary; but if he can give us an analysis, without too much trouble——

Mr. HULL. That can be done without any trouble. I assume that that would properly come up under each head. For instance, when we reach the point of the pay to officers of the line the chances are that the provision for abolishing the grade of Lieutenant-General will go out on a point of order. It is subject to a point of order. It is legislation; it is retrenchment, but it is legislation. When we reach the point of the clerks—the Department has divided the Government into five great divisions. It has divided it into more than that number of departments. Each division is headed by a major-general and the department by a brigadier-general. They report that they must have so many clerks. They have had detailed men doing that work, but they say it is impossible now to do it. We have established a War College, and the building will be finished by the 1st of June. They say it will be necessary to have men to care for the building—police it. It is an increased expense to the Government in the care of that additional building. And so it goes on through the bureaus. We have only allowed what we think is absolutely necessary. My judgment is that we have gone to the point of absolute economy, but that matter all comes before the House, and if the House is not satisfied with the action of the committee we will give them no increase.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's explanation. I think it is clear and adequate, but the gentleman from Iowa appreciates this fact, that when these various bills come up in the House it is impracticable for a man that is not on the committee to look at an item and say whether it is an increase or a decrease.

Mr. HULL. In that respect the committee's report shows where the increases are, except in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the report shows it I will get the report and look it over. A word more, in order that the gentleman may appreciate my position and the significance of the inquiry. I made the same inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the urgent deficiency bill, and was informed by him that there was only one office created. As we went through the bill I found there were twenty-eight created in that bill as against one. Of course, the chairman made an inadvertent statement as far as that was concerned, for I have no doubt he intended to state it as he remembered it. It only shows that it is impossible for a man that is not on the committee to understand the bill in that respect. I hope the gentleman from Iowa appreciates the situation.

Mr. HULL. I do, and I shall be glad to give the gentleman any information in my power.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, in looking through the Official Army Register for 1905, which is the last one that I am able to get—the other not having been printed—it discloses these facts: Sixty-two brigadier-generals served only one day; they were appointed between January 1, 1902, and up to January 1, 1905. I am frank to say to the House that I am inclined to think that the moving picture is going on, and has for the last year, perhaps not at the same rate it did in the previous years. The same official register discloses the fact that four major-generals are now on the retired list, who served only one day in that grade and who were appointed between April 11, 1903, and December 31, 1904. I know that the people of this country have a high regard, and justly so, for the Army.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. How does it happen that these major-generals and brigadier-generals only served one day?

Mr. PRINCE. Well, it happened.

Mr. PALMER. How did it happen?

Mr. PRINCE. The records disclose the fact.

Mr. PALMER. Were they simply promoted and then retired?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Promoted the day before they were retired?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. And, of course, get the retired pay of the promoted rank?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. And the law allows it?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. Who is responsible for it?

Mr. PRINCE. Well, I should say primarily the Congress, as it passed the law.

Mr. PALMER. Is there a law for it?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. The President does it?

Mr. PRINCE. He does it as the law permits, and the Senate, if I have a right to speak of that body, confirms his action.

Mr. PALMER. What are we going to do about it?

Mr. PRINCE. We are offering some suggestions along the line of getting rid of the lieutenant-generals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is so liberal in yielding his time to others that I will ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I hope he will be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. HULL. I understood, Mr. Chairman, that the time was allotted to each side, and I have agreed to yield so much time to others. I submit to the chairman that it is not in order to ask unanimous consent for additional time to be given to a Member.

Mr. PRINCE. I think ten minutes will probably answer the purpose unless there are many questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for ten minutes more.

Mr. PRINCE. I am very much obliged. We have offered a provision here on page 5, beginning with line 19 of the bill:

Provided further, That when the office of Lieutenant-General shall become vacant it shall not hereafter be filled, but said office shall cease and determine.

On page 14 we have offered another provision, beginning at line 14—

Provided further, That hereafter no officer holding a rank above that of colonel shall be retired on his own application until he shall have served at least one year in such rank.

I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] if he has listened to my reference to what we have offered as curative in a sense of this trouble?

Mr. PALMER. I was listening.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Have you any figures showing the number of brigadier-generals on the list now by virtue of the provisions of the act passed two or three years ago allowing the retirement at one grade above the grade they held before retirement?

Mr. PRINCE. The civil-war veterans?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. No; but I will try and get it. I will go on with what I was saying and then we will reach that afterwards. I think I said, before I was interrupted, something like this: That the country had a high regard for the Army and for the officers of the Army. In the great struggle from 1861 to 1865, where, as I have said, 4,500 battles were fought, large and small, for the men who emerged from that contest on either side who wore the star of a brigadier-general or a major-general, or the one lone officer who wore the star of a Lieutenant-General, the people had a high regard and consideration for them and each of them, and I am inclined to think, with no word of criticism toward the men who have held those offices since Sheridan retired as Lieutenant-General, that the tendency of placing other men who perhaps might have distinguished themselves as opportunity presented in the same plane to those other world-wide distinguished men, has had a tendency to demoralize the Army. It has had a tendency to cause the people to have less respect for the Army and the officers that it would have had had the office of Lieutenant-General ceased to be held by anyone after Sheridan retired from that position. As I said before, I am not here to criticise these officers for taking advantage of the law as it is. I am here only calling attention to conditions as they exist. Speaking, as I do, in a sense, for the committee, which is unanimous upon this provision, I am asking the fellow-members of this House to have the office of Lieutenant-General cease, as desired by this bill. I am asking that the further provision—shall be passed. Now, what is the effect of this mode of retirement? It is no encouragement, from my point of view, for an active, thoughtful, energetic, wide-awake officer. All that he needs to do in the world is to mark time and to know later on, whether he has distinguished himself in war or peace, that he will hold the rank of brigadier-general on the retired list in this great Republic of ours. It is an unearned honor; it is unearned money. It is giving an honor to those who have not earned it; it is giving money to those who have not earned it. One day's service for four major-generals; one day's service for sixty-two brigadier-generals. Can we justify ourselves in this House when the facts are before us; can we justify ourselves before the country that we are in favor of it? I am not criticising another branch of the Government for exercising the law as it is. I have heard the Secretary of War state that at the top there is a lot of dead timber, and that perhaps this is the best way we have now to put them on the retired list and pay them for something they never earned, for services they never performed. I do not believe it. There ought to be a better way, and we are seeking to get it in the suggestions made in this bill, and I trust and hope when the bill comes up for action that the Committee of the Whole will favor the passage of the bill as we have presented it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I notice this statement says that a hundred and seventeen brigadier-generals have been retired on their application, of which sixty-two are retired on one day's service as brigadier-generals. Now, is it true that the War Department makes this rule, that under the act of two or three years ago, by which the civil-war veterans have the right to retire on their own application at one grade higher than the rank they then held, that these sixty-two have been compelled to retire in order to reach the rank of brigadier-general, and that the War Department has refused to give the civil-war veterans the rank of brigadier-general in active command, although they have promoted men older, but with a shorter term in the service, to the rank of brigadier-general in active command, men who have joined the Regular Army since the civil war, and that they have refused to promote to the rank of brigadier-general civil-war veterans, although they have been longer in the service? I want to know if that is true.

Mr. PRINCE. No one of the sixty-two brigadier-generals who served only one day were retired under the act of April 23, 1904. I am not prepared to answer as to the policy of the War Department. I guess, perhaps, the chairman can answer it better than I can.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] has expired.

Mr. PRINCE. I am frank to say there is a good deal of truth in what the gentleman has said.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman if he needs it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It seems to me the gentleman from Illinois has shown here a very outrageous abuse of power and privilege on the part of some one. I am not very familiar with the details, but, as I understand him, an officer in the Army may be a lieutenant-colonel who can not be retired at the age he then is. Do I understand that he is promoted on the understanding that the next day he shall be retired, and thereafter draw pay for services he never has rendered? If so, I would like to ask who does the promoting?

Mr. PRINCE. Well, I guess this is true, that a man might be a colonel, and he might have been connected with the civil war—this is a hypothetical case—that he may desire to be a brigadier-general in command of troops, and, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has said, there is no opportunity for him to command troops as a brigadier-general. But by way of the grapevine route he may receive information or suggestion to the effect that if he wants to be promoted and retired the next day as a brigadier-general such a thing might happen, and the records I have read seem to indicate that such things have happened.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Who is it that makes the promotion? The President of the United States?

Mr. PRINCE. The President has the right to make the promotion, and the only one that has the right, and the Senate has to confirm that promotion.

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if, under the law as it now stands, there is any practicable way in which you can get an officer out of the Army until he reaches the rank of brigadier-general, or is 64 years of age?

Mr. PRINCE. In answer to my colleague on the committee, I would say there is a way, but they rarely ever pursue that thoroughfare.

Mr. YOUNG. That is on failure to pass examination?

Mr. PRINCE. Failure to pass examination is one way, and the retiring board could exercise their functions; but they do not.

Mr. YOUNG. Has there been a single case since the law was passed when men have been retired for failure to pass examinations, or by the retiring board?

Mr. PRINCE. I can not say, but it is so rarely used that you might say there are none.

Mr. YOUNG. Is it not the excuse that is now given by the War Department for these promotions, that it is cheaper to get inefficient men out of the active list in the Army on the retired list of a higher grade than it is to keep them in at a lower grade and give them full pay?

Mr. PRINCE. That has been stated, but I can not agree with the statement. I can see no reason why officers who have taken a like oath with the rest of us to obey the Constitution and the laws can knowingly and willfully permit inefficient officers to remain in the service until they can reach the rank of brigadier-general and then get them out on the pay roll. I can not square it with my ideas of equality and justice, that the common soldiers, the volunteer soldiers from 1861 to 1865, who fought three years, shall receive as a pension for services actually rendered $6 a month, and other men serving in the Army forty years afterwards can be retired as brigadier-generals and get on an average, as the Army retired list shows, $3,000 for services practically not to compare with that of the enlisted soldier.

Mr. YOUNG. Will my friend permit one more question?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. YOUNG. Does not he think there ought to be some law passed by Congress by which inefficient officers can be gotten out of the Army below the grade of colonel?

Mr. PRINCE. I do.

Mr. HULL. Does not the gentleman know that there is such a law, and has been for thirty years, on the statute books?

Mr. PRINCE. They will not enforce it.

Mr. YOUNG. We have discussed that matter.

Mr. PRINCE. That is the stricture that I make, and as I said I can not understand why men who have taken a like oath with us to protect the flag should doff one hand to the flag while the other hand is in the Treasury getting money for a grade in which they, many of them, served but one day.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I would like a little more specific answer to the question I put. Is it not true that this retired list has increased the list of brigadier-generals because the War Department will not permit veterans of the civil war to be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general in the active service, and the only way that veterans of the civil war can be promoted to the rank of brigadier-general is by being promoted and retired at the same time under the provision of the act of a few years ago, and that has compelled fifty or sixty of the officers of the civil war to be placed on the retired list, when otherwise some of them might be serving acceptably on the active list now, because the War Department refuses to promote them? I would like an answer from either of the gentleman, the chairman or the gentleman who is addressing the committee.

Mr. HULL. I will not interfere with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PRINCE. I have heretofore stated that the sixty-two brigadier-generals who served only one day were not retired under the civil-war provision of the law. My good friend on the committee [Mr. CAPRON], the Yankee member, suggests that I turn Yankee for a while and ask my former colleague on the Military Committee [Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota], the interrogator, what he knows about that, and how he would answer that. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am asking for information.

Mr. PRINCE. I think the gentleman has all the information I have on this subject.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question, if that incident has gone by?

Mr. PRINCE. It has gone by, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANN. If it be the purpose of the War Department to place all of the officers who served in the civil war upon the retired list as brigadier-generals as far as can possibly be done, does not a similar reason exist for practically creating a volunteer retired list, composed of all the surviving officers of the civil war, in accordance with a proposition now pending before the committee?

Mr. PRINCE. In answer to my colleague, I would say this: It appears that the War Department has a definite policy as to the one, and I do not know what their policy is as to the other. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAY. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, when I came to Congress I knew that the House of Representative was governed and controlled by rules; I knew that committees had practical charge of all legislation; I knew that the Speaker was a powerful personage; I knew that the individual Member of Congress had a very small voice in shaping governmental policies, but I did not fully realize the fact that three men of the 386 composing the membership of this body had this great House of Representatives by the throat and could strangle proposed legislation at their will. I did not fully realize how completely representative government of the people had been supplanted by the sway of three rule-created autocrats, and I am quite sure the American people have not fully realized the extent of the transformation which has taken place, for when they do they will hurl from power any political party responsible for the fostering of so undemocratic and un-American a method of procedure. [Applause.]

The American House of Representatives, once proudly boasted of as the "greatest deliberative assembly on earth," is no longer a deliberative body. Under the operation of its rules the voices of 383 of its Members are hushed as with the stillness of death, while three rule-made gentlemen legislate for 80,000,000 free people. This great power ought not to be conferred on three men at the cost of disfranchising the people of 383 Congressional districts in America. If the House of Representatives is so weak and servile as to relinquish its power into the hands of the Speaker and a Committee on Rules appointed by him, then the Speaker should rise to the full stature of his American manhood and refuse to exercise this one-man power, which is a misfit in American institutions and which can only find a congenial home in the rotten monarchies of the Old World. [Applause.] Why, sir, the impotency of the House of Representatives is on every tongue; its inability to digest legislation through the medium of full and free discussion is frankly admitted; the poor privilege of offering amendments to pending bills is arbitrarily denied, and the shameful decadence of this body from its once proud position as the one branch of the National Legislature which truly reflected the sentiment of the masses of the American people to its present pitiable condition would be ludicrous in the extreme were it not for the fact that this state of affairs may be the beginning of the end of popular government in this great Republic.

It is no answer to this to assert that some other political party at some other time operated under similar rules. It is no justification for the majority here to plead that my party when in power enforced rules of like import. "Two wrongs never made one right," and never will. You can not plead "precedent" as a defense. "Precedent" and "custom" cover up more of sin and wrong than all the "charity" of all the world can shield from the public gaze. The true test to apply to every proposed rule, regardless of "precedent" and "custom," should be: "Is it right?" "Is it just to the American people?" In the language of the President, does it give every Member on this floor a "square deal?" Unless these questions can be answered in the affirmative, unless the proposed rule measures up to this standard, then, Mr. Chairman, it is wrong, and all the "precedents" and "customs" which have been established since the dawn of creation can not make it right. "It has been held," no matter how erroneous may have been the holding, seems to be infinitely more powerful in controlling the action of this House than "It is." A halt should be called. We should return to the simpler legislative life of the fathers, giving to every Member upon this floor ample opportunity to truly and faithfully voice the sentiments of his constituency on all matters of proposed legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I have been moved to make these observations on account of a bill which I introduced on the 14th day of December, 1905, and which on the same day was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, where it has peacefully slumbered ever since, and where I suppose it will remain until the angel Gabriel shall announce to a listening world that time shall be no more. [Laughter.] I contend, sir, that the committee, in all fairness, should report that bill back to the House with either a favorable or an adverse report and let the Members of this body, on their individual responsibility and under their oaths of office, declare whether or no it should be written into the laws of the land. It is a bill which affects every person throughout the broad domain of this great Republic, and the people all over this land are appealing to the Congress for relief along the lines covered by it. In order that the House may understand the matter involved, I will read the bill. It is as follows:

A bill to prohibit internal-revenue officers from receiving special taxes from any person, firm, or corporation for the carrying on of the business of a brewer, manufacturer of stills, rectifier of distilled spirits, wholesale or retail dealer in spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors in communities where the carrying on of such business is prohibited by local laws, and to prescribe punishment for its violation.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any collector of internal revenue, or other internal-revenue officer of the United States, to receive from any person, firm, or corporation payment of any special tax as a brewer, manufacturer of stills, rectifier of distilled spirits, wholesale or retail dealer in spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors where the business of such person, firm, or corporation is to be carried on in any voting district, town, city, county, Territory, or State where, under the local laws of such voting district, town, city, county, Territory, or State, such business is prohibited.

SEC. 2. That any person, firm, or corporation engaging in any business mentioned in section 1 of this act in any voting district, town, city, county, Territory, or State where the carrying on of such business is prohibited by the local laws of such voting district, town, city, county, Territory, or State shall, for every such offense, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions hereof be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

It will be observed that the sole purpose of this bill is to prohibit internal-revenue collectors from receiving special taxes from persons who propose to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors, etc., in communities where by local laws the carrying on of such business is prohibited. The regulation, control, or prohibition of the liquor traffic is entirely within the jurisdiction of the respective States. The Federal Government does not and can not issue to any person a license or privilege to engage in the business of a dealer in intoxicating liquors within the borders of any State. The power to grant such a license is vested exclusively in the States themselves, and the only power possessed by the General Government in the premises is to lay a special tax on the business itself after the State has authorized the business to be carried on within its boundaries. The United States Government has recognized this contention in every statute enacted on the subject, and there is a distinct and emphatic recognition of it in the existing law.

Section 3243, Revised Statutes of the United States, reads as follows:

The payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws for carrying on any trade or business shall not be held to exempt any person from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on the same within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade or business contrary to the laws of such State or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any such tax be held to prohibit any State from placing a duty or tax on the same trade or business for State or other purposes.

I feel quite sure from the reading of this section of the statute that Congress intended by its enactment to absolutely prohibit the receipt of special taxes from persons who desired to engage in the liquor business in prohibition territory. The statute expressly provides that the payment of the special tax to the General Government shall not be held "in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade or business contrary to the laws of such State, or in places prohibited by municipal law." This language is plain and free from any double meaning. If it means anything at all, it means that Congress recognizes the exclusive power of the States to deal with this question, and declares the purpose of Congress to do nothing which can be construed into an intention to "in any manner" or by any means authorize either the "commencement or continuance" of the business of selling intoxicating liquors in communities where by the law of the State the carrying on of such business is prohibited. If the section does not mean this, then it means nothing and should be promptly repealed.

This construction being correct, then the Congress of the United States should do nothing that will in anywise interfere with the control and regulation of this business by the respective States. I think that all will agree that in a Government such as ours the General Government should work in harmony with the State government to enforce the law, preserve order, and promote the general welfare of all the people. There should be no conflict of authority between the two governments, and no action upon the part of either to hinder, delay, or obstruct the enforcement of laws which lie within the peculiar jurisdiction of the other. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, this is the plan upon which our Government was constructed and the lines upon which the founders of this Republic intended that the due enforcement of the law should proceed; but while the founders of this Republic intended from the beginning that the most perfect harmony should prevail between the sovereign States and the General Government, and while every act of Congress has contemplated this course, a system of what we might term "departmental government" has sprung up in the management of the affairs of this Republic which has to a large extent usurped the functions of the Congress and has prescribed rules and regulations entirely at variance with the spirit and letter of Congressional enactment. We then have the fact of departmental interference with the functions of the Congress clearly illustrated in orders which have been issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with relation to the sale of intoxicating liquors within the different States of the Union. Although we have seen that the act of Congress specifically provides that the payment of a special tax to the Federal Government as a retail liquor dealer does not in any manner exempt the person who pays the tax from prosecution and punishment for engaging in such business within the limits of a State contrary to the laws of such State, and that the payment of such tax to the General Government does not in any manner authorize the commencement or the continuance of such business contrary to the laws of such State, and that it does not authorize the commencement or the continuance of such business in any place where the business is prohibited by municipal law, and the Congress of the United States, further to define the position of the Federal Government on this question, enacted what is now known as section 3240 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which declares:

Each collector of internal revenue shall, under regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, place and keep conspicuously in his office, for public inspection, an alphabetical list of the names of all persons who shall have paid special taxes within his district, and shall state thereon the time, place, and business for which such special taxes have been paid.

Thereby intending undoubtedly to place within easy reach of the State authorities in the different States evidence of the violation of State laws on the subject, so as to aid the local authorities in the enforcement of their local laws, yet the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, being supported therein by the Secretary of the Treasury, issued an order which is in full force and effect to-day, and which reads as follows:

Records in a collector's office relating to special taxpayers are based on returns made by these persons under compulsion of law for the sole purpose of raising revenue for the United States. Collectors are not permitted to send out these records, or copies thereof, for use against the special taxpayers in cases not arising under the laws of the United States. (Vol. 1, Treasury Decisions 1898, No. 19190.)

In re Weeks, reported in 83 Federal Reporter, at page 729, the court uses this language:

An instruction issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, directing collectors and their deputies to refuse to produce in criminal prosecutions of liquor dealers in the State courts the returns made to the collectors, or the list showing payments of Federal liquor taxes, or to give information, derived from official sources as to the fact of such payments, is valid and in accordance with the Federal laws.

Thus it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the unmistakable intent of the Congress for national legislation on this subject to exist in harmony with that of the different States, and the evident purpose of Congress to aid the States in the enforcement of their laws on this subject, has been absolutely nullified and destroyed by departmental orders instead of aiding and promoting the general welfare by assisting them in the enforcement of their police regulations, we find the Departments of the Federal Government obstructing the enforcement of State laws, and materially aiding and abetting persons to carry on this business in violation of the reasonable, rightful, and proper regulation of this traffic within the States.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, there exists in the United States to-day a notorious copartnership between the Federal Government and violators of the law in the different States, the purpose of the partnership being to defy the authority and trample under foot the laws of the sovereign States. There is no escape from the proposition that the Federal Government has been placed in the attitude, for a few palty dollars, of forming an alliance with persons who are openly defying the laws of the different States. There can be no reasonable excuse for this. The United States Government says that the regulation of this traffic is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction and power of the different States. The General Government declares that it has no power to license or regulate or control or permit or prohibit this business within the confines of any State. The only right claimed by the General Government is the right to impose a tax on the business in a State where by the laws of such State the particular business is authorized to be carried on. I say this because if the right to regulate or control or permit or to prohibit is exclusively within the power of the sovereign States and a particular State sees fit to prohibit the traffic, and thereby declares it to be an unlawful business within that State, then the Congress has no right to impose a tax upon the business within that particular State, for the simple reason that the General Government has no power to levy a tax upon an unlawful business.

The business of selling intoxicating liquors is not unlawful per se. It is not what is known to the law as mala in se. It is what is known to the law as mala prohibita. Before the business of selling intoxicating liquors can be considered an unlawful business it must be declared to be unlawful by the law-making power. It is conceded by everybody that within the limits of the State the business of selling intoxicating liquors can only be declared to be unlawful by the legislature of the particular State.

This being true, and as I have already stated no one will be found who will deny its truth, then the question arises that if the State in the regular way, through its law-making body, declares by solemn enactment that the business of selling intoxicating liquors within such State is unlawful and shall not be permitted, has the Congress of the United States any right morally or legally to levy a tax and seek to derive a revenue from an illegal and unlawful business? It occurs to me that there can be but one opinion on this question, and but one course for the Congress of the United States to pursue. This is not a question of prohibition. This is not a question of regulating the liquor traffic. It is simply a question of recognizing and sustaining the undoubted right of the sovereign States of this Union to deal with this question in any manner which appears to them to be proper and right. This is simply a question of permitting a majority of the people of a State to have their way in the solution of the problem, which is entirely, under the law, within the province of the States themselves to determine. It is purely a question of local self-government with which the General Government ought not to intermeddle.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that the effect resulting from the position taken by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in receiving special taxes from persons to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors in prohibition communities, and his issuance of an order prohibiting collectors of internal revenue from furnishing evidence to the local courts in the matter of furnishing the names of persons who had paid such special taxes in prohibition territory, had been to create a copartnership between the General Government and the illicit liquor dealer, which partnership had for its purpose the violation and defiance of State laws. In order to give you some idea of the extent of this violation of law, I want to call your attention to a set of facts existing in two or three States of the Union. The figures which I shall give represent the condition all over this country. The State of Maine, as is well known, is a prohibition State, and the State authorities do not issue licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any portion of the State of Maine. They did not issue any licenses in that State for the sale of intoxicating liquors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905. Yet, Mr. Chairman, for that fiscal year 640 persons in the State of Maine paid to the General Government a special tax as retail liquor dealers in that State.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that in 1905 there was a reduction in the tax receipts issued in the State of Maine as compared with the year 1904, or a year or two prior, of something like four or five hundred, showing a marked decrease in 1905 as compared with 1904 or the prior year? This statement, I trust, does not interfere with the gentleman's argument.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did not know that; but still the issuing of any is a violation of law, and ought not to be permitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. HAY. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It is likewise well known that the State of Kansas is a prohibition State, yet for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, during which time the State of Kansas did not issue a single license for the sale of intoxicating liquors, 3,024 persons paid to the General Government a special tax as retail liquor dealers in the State of Kansas. The State of Connecticut is not a prohibition State, and licenses the sale of intoxicating liquors within her borders. During the fiscal year 1905 the State of Connecticut issued 2,191 licenses to persons to engage in the retail liquor business in that State. During the same year 3,269 persons paid to the General Government a special tax as retail liquor dealers in the State of Connecticut. In other words, 1,078 persons were selling liquor illegally in the State of Connecticut. This is a fair sample of the state of affairs in all the States and Territories of the Union. We have boasted, Mr. Chairman, that the Indians were our special wards, and the Federal statutes are loaded down with declarations that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold in the Indian Territory. Yet, we find for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, twenty-five persons paid to the General Government a special tax as retail liquor dealers in the Indian Territory.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to state right there, in the Indian Territory in addition to that there are one hundred and thirty odd special taxes received from persons as retail dealers in malt liquors by the Federal authorities?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did not know that, but the gentleman from Mississippi states there are a hundred and thirty persons who pay taxes in the Indian Territory as retail dealers in malt liquors.

And thus it is, Mr. Chairman, that we are absolutely standing in the position to-day, for the few paltry dollars that this great Government of the United States gets as a tax from retail liquor dealers, of being in parnership in the different States with illicit liquor sellers, defying State laws, trampling State sovereignty under foot. And in the Indian Territory, where our special wards are located, we have 155 pets that we have practically licensed to debauch these Indian wards. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Federal Government receives this money from persons in States wherein the carrying on of this business is unlawful.

The Federal Government knows that it is unlawful; knows that the regulation of this matter is entirely within the jurisdiction of the States, and yet the United States accepts a small pittance from these malefactors, knowing their intention to violate the law and actually protecting them by refusing the State authorities access to the evidence of their crime. It may be said that these twenty-five persons, who paid the special tax in the Indian Territory, were legitimate druggists, and that it was necessary for them to pay it to carry on a legitimate drug business, but this is not true. It is not necessary for any man who carries on a legitimate drug business to pay a special tax as a retail liquor dealer to the Government of the United States. Such a dealer is exempt from the payment of this tax. In support of this, I call your attention to the case of the United States v. Calhoun, reported in 39 Federal Reporter, at page 604:

> Any apothecary who bona fide uses spirituous liquors in the preparation of a medicine, to be used as such and not as a beverage, does not violate Revised Statutes of the United States, section 3242, by not paying the special tax required of a retail liquor dealer.

Mr. Chairman, in the State of Florida, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor, we have a local-option law—that is to say, each county can have an election held for the purpose, and at such election declare for itself whether it desires to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the county or not. About two-thirds of the counties of the State of Florida have become prohibition counties under the operation of this local-option law, and the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited in that large number of counties. There are in these prohibition counties numbers of places that are locally denominated "blind tigers." These illicit liquor dealers, as a rule, pay to the General Government the special tax required to carry on their nefarious business. It has been a most prolific source of crime in that State, and I do not believe that I am far from the fact when I say that, in my opinion, nine-tenths of the crimes committed in the State of Florida are directly traceable to the "blind tiger." The violator of this law is mortally afraid of the United States court, and I sincerely believe that if collectors of internal revenue were prohibited from receiving special taxes from persons in prohibition communities to engage in this business that we would soon have a true and genuine prohibition in such communities. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there is perhaps more misinformation upon the subject of ship subsidies than any other subject that is now agitating the public mind. In my private opinion the most pernicious piece of legislation that ever emanated from the Congress of the United States passed the Senate just the other day with a good deal of flippancy. I have been so much impressed with this subject that I have written letters to the different countries of the Old World in the effort to obtain the bottom facts in relation to subsidies. I will be very much complimened if I can induce the distinguished gentleman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries [Mr. GROSVENOR] to come over in hearing distance and listen to some of the data that I have been able to collect.

In the first place, I will make the statement that the United States of America has the largest and the most profitable merchant marine of any country on the globe, with the single exception perhaps of the United Kingdom. I was exceedingly anxious, Mr. Chairman, this morning that we should honor the memory of that distinguished citizen who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen" by adjourning this House. But inasmuch as you Republicans have refused to do that, I propose in some measure to punish you by afflicting you with a lot of facts and figures upon the subject of ship subsidies.

Now, my first proposition is that we have more ships in the merchant marine than any other country in the world, not excepting England. The last report of the Commissioner of Navigation shows that on June 30, 1905, the United States had 24,681 vessels, and the United Kingdom, the British Empire, including her colonies and all, had only 20,452.

The advocates of ship subsidy argue that while we have more ships than any other country in the world that the gross tonnage of England is so much larger than ours that it makes England the mistress of the seas; but I would like to have gentlemen understand that the gross tonnage of a ship is no indication of its strength or the strength of a fleet or the profit of the industry or the income derived from the prosecution of the trade. For example, our coastwise trade is exclusively under the control of this Government, and the average trip is only 500 miles, while in the foreign trade of the British Empire and other countries the average trip is 3,500. So that the gross tonnage of the British and other ships is consumed, in a great measure, by coal and provisions and machinery that are used in making the journey. Our coastwise ships will make five trips and carry five cargoes and collect her dues and income and her freight rates five times while the British ships are making one trip, carrying one cargo, and collecting her freight rates one time.

We have devoted a large part of this session of Congress in the effort to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of reducing railroad rates; for the purpose of forcing the railroads only to charge a fair and reasonable rate, and we have done that in the face of the fact which everybody conceded that our railroad rates were lower than they were in any other country in the world.

Now we are confronted with a proposition, headed by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, that we are to increase the rates of the shipping industry because they are too low; or, what is the same thing, we are to tax the American people over $60,000,000 in order that American ships may continue to carry the traffic across the sea at the same rate at which it is being carried now without the subsidy. There is no pretext of any effort to reduce the freight rates across the sea; there is no promise that the rate from the farm or the factory to the seaboard shall be decreased; but the proposition is that our freight rates across the sea are so low and that our commerce has been carried to foreign markets at such a low price that we must increase the price, we must tax ourselves $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 in order that the American shipowner and the American shipmaster may continue to prosecute their trade at the present rate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I should be delighted to be interrupted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To what proposition does the gentleman refer when he talks about $60,000,000?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I refer to the bill passed by the Senate the other day and now pending in this House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, if the bill should pass and be carried into execution to the end, the net expenditure for the Government will not exceed in twenty years $10,000,000.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I have heard that statement repeatedly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is true.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I think it is like all the information that you take out of certain newspapers and magazines. There is not a Member of Congress but what has heard that statement repeated a dozen times, and many of them, like the gentleman from Ohio, have jumped to the conclusion that the bill will cost only eight or ten millions of dollars. I can demonstrate to an absolute certainty, and to the conviction of the gentleman from Ohio, that this bill will cost over $60,000,000; and it is admitted even by the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire, Senator GALLINGER, that this bill will cost from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 in the first ten years—admitted upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But if the gentleman will allow me, the bill provides by a new system of revenue, that does not cost this Government nor the people of this Government a cent, to supply substantially half of that cost.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio is again mistaken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman is not mistaken.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. That feature of the bill was stricken out entirely in the Senate and has never been reinserted on the floor of this House. The original draft of the bill did contain a clause for a discriminating tonnage duty against foreign vessels and in favor of the American shipowner and shipmaster, but that feature of the bill was stricken out, and if it was not stricken out it is entirely in conflict with the purpose of the legislation. You are seeking to relieve the shipowner of the country, seeking to enlarge the opportunities of the American ship, and with what sort of propriety can you stand up and argue that you are putting an additional burden upon the ship for the purpose of reimbursing the Treasury for the outlay you have incurred in other parts of the bill?

Now, I started to say a while ago that the whole country is about to be stampeded upon the subject of our ships being driven from the sea; that our ships can not compete with the subsidized ships of the Old World, and that the Old World—Japan, Germany, England, Italy, and France—are paying out millions of dollars for their shipping, and that we are allowing our ships to decay in the docks. I say I had heard that so often that I wrote to the chairman of the British Board of Trade, which in the British Empire occupies substantially the same position as the Interior Department in this country, and I am loaded down here with facts and figures that are absolutely amazing. The House of Commons appointed a committee of naval experts, and they sat day in and day out for two years. In 1902 they made this report to the British House of Commons. I would like to have time to read you a portion of this report. There is no naval power in the world that pays subsidies altogether to its ships as large as we do excepting France. Of course the gentleman will smile. I will furnish you figures to show that the United States Government last year paid for the transportation of mails more money——

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much did they pay?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky (continuing). Than either Japan, Italy, Germany, or England paid on all of their so-called ship subsidies.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information before he gets too far from the point on which he is speaking.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. Assuming that this country has so many ships at sea, as would seem to be indicated by the statement of the gentleman, I want to know why it is that the manufacturers of agricultural implements and machinery of all kinds in my city of Springfield, Ohio, are compelled to send that machinery from New York to Liverpool in order to get it to Brazil or the Argentine Republic?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Now, wait a minute. One at a time. The answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is perfectly obvious, and instead of being a reflection upon this country it is a great compliment to this country. The gentleman from Ohio might just as well rise in his seat and ask me why it is that the American laborer will not go down with pick and shovel to excavate the Panama Canal. Why does he not go? I for one do not want him to go.

I want that canal dug by Jamaica negroes and cooly Chinese and Portuguese and other people who are willing to be subjected to privations and to the poor pay and the unhealthful climate and all the other environments that are objectionable to the American laborer. The same reason applies in answer to the gentleman's question. Our America is so broad, so rich, and the opportunities for the young man are so great that he will not consent to go on shipboard, and, like the galley slave of the ancient Roman Empire, be virtually tied to his ship and subject himself to the liability of being put in prison for the violation of a civil contract. He will not consent to the poor pay, he will not consent to work in competition with the Portuguese and the coolies, upon the same principle that he will not work down in the Panama Canal. Another answer to the gentleman's question is this——

Mr. KEIFER. Before you get too far away from that, will you allow me?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. We are to draw the inference, then, from your illustration about the laborers on the Panama Canal, that the reason American ships will not carry the agricultural implements and machinery manufactured in central Ohio is that our people will not become sailors or our vessels carry the machinery directly to Brazil or Rio Janeiro or to the Argentine Republic, and that it is because of the character of the sailors of England that we must send these things over to Liverpool and reship them to the South American countries.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Ohio bear in mind that it is infinitely better for the farmer and the manufacturer of Ohio to have his products carried to Liverpool and Odessa and other foreign ports under a foreign flag if the terms of the transportation are cheaper, if the freight rate is lower? The gentleman from Ohio has the idea that it is a reflection upon this country for an American capitalist to go to the Clyde or to the Mersey or to any other foreign country and buy a ship and hoist a British or a German flag from the masthead. The same process is going on in every country of Europe. This special committee reports that in 1899 there were built in the British Empire 479 first-class ships, built by English architects and shipbuilders for foreign countries, and that the tonnage had been transferred to foreign flags; that it was no disadvantage to England or to the commerce of England. Neither is it any reflection on this country or any disadvantage to this country that J. Pierpont Morgan and the other capitalists and corporations of this country are buying ships by the hundred and floating the British flag from the masthead. Those ships are part of the American merchant marine. They are owned by American capitalists, they are not a part of the merchant marine of the British Empire.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman name some of those ships?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I will have to read the gentleman a law book now and give the names later.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want the gentleman to go back to a statement that he made about which I was trying to ask him a question when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] interrupted me. I think actual facts will be more important than theories.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I will have to ask the gentleman from Ohio to repeat his question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. As I understood the gentleman from Kentucky, he stated that the Congress of the United States, or the United States, was paying more money for carrying the ocean mails than the British Government was paying for its subsidies.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes; exclusive of its mail contracts.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And now I want to ask the gentleman to state how much that is—what amount the United States is paying per annum.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman wants to know how much the United States pays——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; for general mail transportation on its own ships.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I have so many figures here that it is difficult for me to select just what I want to convert a man who has grown old in error. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I know another gentleman who is rapidly following in the footsteps of his predecessor. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The last report of the Postmaster-General——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, bear in mind what your statement is—that the United States is paying for transporting its mail in its own ships—keep that in your mind—a greater sum than the British Government is paying in subsidies.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am not seeking to dodge that question; I am trying to get the gentleman to come up nearer where I can hear him. In answer to the first part of his question, I want to say that this country paid last year for transporting the foreign mails $2,693,812.09.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To American ships?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. That does not make a bit of difference. We pay the American ships a much larger price per pound than we do the foreign ships, and we do not pay the foreign ships any more than the foreign countries pay our ships. It is a case of reciprocity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman state what foreign government pays our ships for carrying the mail?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. All the countries of Europe.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Give us the name of one country and the name of a ship.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I insist—I haven't the figures on that particular point—I insist that there is no country in Christendom that carries all of its own foreign mail. Now, we paid for the transportation of foreign mails last year, as I said, $2,693,812. The gentleman from Ohio tries to break the force of the argument by the statement that a part of that money was paid to foreign ships and very little of it, or at least only some inconsiderable portion of it, was paid to the American ships. But in answer to that, or rather as a rejoinder to that, we learn that that is true of every country. To the Peninsula and Oriental Line and others going through the Straits of Gibraltar and under that frowning old fortress, Port Said, and to other oversea lines the British Government pays £712,376 a year, and this Government receives from her colonies and other countries a return compensation for the transportation for a large part of the foreign mails.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will take the gentleman's figures now—$2,600,000, the gentleman said, that we paid our ships for carrying our mails last year. Does the gentleman know that the British Parliament gave to a single shipping line last year, the year 1905, $6,000,000 as a subsidy?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. This report says——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, it is since the gentleman's report, the gentleman has got an old wooden moldboard report. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I got it from a more nearly original source than the gentleman from Ohio got his information, and there has been no new legislation on the subject in England since that report was filed in 1902. Prior to that report the subvention to the Cunard line was increased from 28,000 pounds to 150,000 pounds, and the Government agreed to also lend that company a sufficient sum at an agreed rate of interest to build two very large, fast steamers. This, although a new departure for that country, is not a subsidy, but was considered as a method of having certain work performed for the Government, and this is the contract the gentleman from Ohio was aiming to state. The gentleman is altogether in error. There was no new subsidy of $6,000,000 or any other amount granted in 1905.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have it directly from our own Department here.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I have it directly from original documents issued by the British Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Made four years ago.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. In 1902. I made special inquiries to find if there was any later law, and they said that this was the last report, and that report, at page 58 of volume 2, mentions and comments upon the increased subsidy to the Cunard Line.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Only a year ago there was a contract between the Admiralty of the British Government and the Cunard Line, which was published and put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in which it appeared that they had, in order to break up the American mercantile organization, given a practical subsidy of $6,000,000, in round numbers, to build two ships.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman from Ohio for a question. Now, the information, or rather the misinformation, from the gentleman from Ohio is simply startling. There is no such subsidy paid by the British Empire. There is a contract between the Board of Admiralty and that ship company by which these ships are required to be built after a particular fashion. They are required to furnish certain freight rates and certain passenger rates from England to the Orient. And again I remind the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken both as to his dates and his facts; that bounty was provided for prior to the report of 1902, and the Government gets the same rate of interest on this loan that it gets for most of the national debt.

The Government regulates the number of officers and the transportation facilities. The Government over and above all that reserves to itself the right to the control and management of these ships and they are really employed in the Government service. They are much like the so-called subsidy paid by the German Empire. Why, I began to look that matter up. I saw that the gentleman from Ohio and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire had written reports here stating that our ships are being driven from the sea by the North German Lloyd Line, and I found there were only thirty-seven ships in all the German Empire that receive any bounty at all. The gentleman from Ohio smiles and there is running through his mind now the proposition of special freight rates granted by the German railroads and exemption from certain port dues granted by the German Empire. I looked that matter up also, and I find that Germany owns and operates her own railway system, and the German Government, under the management of Mr. Von Bismarck, incorporated a system of making a reduction of 50 per cent on the freight rate on the freight that was intended for foreign markets on the German Lloyd steamers. I went further, and I found after making that 50 per cent reduction upon the freight rate granted by the German Empire to those two ship lines, that still the freight rate was a good deal higher than the railroad rates of this country. I went so far as to get copious extracts from the contracts between the German Empire and those two ship lines—and there are many articles in each one of those contracts—and each one of those ships is required to circumnavigate the entire continent of Africa on each trip, to go alternate directions, this way this time and that way the next time. The Government goes so far as to designate the ports at which they shall stop.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Whether there is any business or not?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Whether there is any business or not. They have got to circumnavigate the entire continent of Africa on every trip.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does not that show the wisdom of the German Government in sending its manufactured articles into all the possible and remote parts of the world, while America carries her trade, 92 per cent of it, on foreign ships?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. It is a more apt illustration of the main burden of my argument, and that is this: That our coastwise trade is the most flourishing on the globe; that it is busy, loaded down with freight, busy making short journeys, busy charging the highest rates of any shipping on the globe, while Germany is subsidizing these ship lines to go and sail across distant seas in search of something to carry. That is the difference. Have you discovered that the highest freight rate on the sea charged by any shipping country on the globe is charged by the coastwise trade of the United States of America?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not found that fact to exist, and I will state to the gentleman another thing.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I will put the freight rates down, taken from the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, and insert them in my remarks for the edification of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, will the gentleman permit me to insert in his remarks that to-day one-third of the ships bearing American register and belonging to the coastwise trade are idle for the want of business?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Idle?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir; to-day, now; not four years ago, but now.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. We have about $13,000,000 invested in shipyards; we have about 34,000 men engaged in building ships. We built in the last two years some naval vessels for which there were appropriated $86,000,000, and the report of the Commissioner of Navigation shows that last year we built 1,102 merchant vessels, and that the figures thus furnished can not be exceeded by any country in the world except the United Kingdom. I have heard that statement made repeatedly, I have heard it over and over again, that we can not build ships as cheaply in this country as they can in England. Why, the gentleman from Ohio is thoroughly imbued with that idea. Now, stop and think about that for a moment——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Just one moment. Does the gentleman take the ground we can build them as cheaply in this country as they can be built in England?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. We can build them as cheaply.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Can we build them as cheaply as they can be built in Belfast, Ireland?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Just as cheaply.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I be allowed? Will the gentleman accept a statement of Mr. Carlyle, managing director of Harlan & Wolff, the greatest shipbuilding concern in the world, located at Belfast, Ireland?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I had a personal conversation with Mr. Carlyle, the managing director of Harlan & Wolff, in August last, in Belfast, Ireland, and I asked him why it was that they could build ships in Belfast cheaper than we could build them in the United States, and he said it was because they hired their labor cheaper than we hired ours, and that was all the reason he knew. That is what he said.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would stop now and reflect seriously. Here is a country that has the most magnificent coal fields on the globe. Here is a country to whose forests the shipbuilders of Belfast come for their masts and their timber. Here is a country that has the most skillful mechanics and draftsmen upon the face of the globe. Here is a country that in every other particular excels the Britisher in his country. Why, to-day American locomotives can be heard whistling along the road that leads from Joppa to Jerusalem and from Jerusalem to Damascus. American flying machines sail over the pyramids. The Sphinx has stopped gazing across the desert and has turned to look at the magnificent American trolley lines that are running from Cairo up to the ancient ruins of Thebes and Memphis. [Applause.] You can go into the Orient and in the homes of luxury, even in the zenanas of Persia and in the seraglios of the Ottoman Empire you will find the hum, the click, and clatter of American sewing machines.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. They are made here, however.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. They are made here. You may go upon any ship and you will find it loaded down with machinery—appliances of every kind—sailing across every sea and underbidding the home products of every land. [Applause.]

Now, I come back to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. Is it not true that the same superior price is paid to the laborer in the manufacture of the sewing machine and the flying machine and every other species of machine that we are manufacturing and shipping all over the civilized world, and that it is because we pay the American laborer a higher price, that we get the most intelligent and most efficient service? The next higher-priced laborer is found right in that same Great Britain that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Oh, no.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. And not only that, but they pay their sailors, their seamen, and every species of laborer in England a very much better price than anywhere on the continent of Europe. And it is mere rot and nonsense, this contention that we can not build ships in this country as cheaply as they can in England. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Now, I know perfectly well that you can produce to me alleged facts after facts, because the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has three volumes of hearings.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman allow an inquiry?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it his conception of the maritime situation that the United States furnishes the raw material for the construction of ships in Belfast, Ireland, many of which are now, to use the gentleman's very effective illustration, using wooden masts for sailing ships built by Harlan & Wolff? Is not that the gentleman's notion about it? It may be that we have got the sewing machines in the seraglios of the Far East. I do not know anything about that. Does the gentleman think we are furnishing wooden masts?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine is not asking me for information.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, yes, he is.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. He is merely seeking to consume a portion of my time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will ask that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I know that the shipbuilders of the Old World do come to the forests of America for timber to use in the construction of their ships, and I know more than that, that the men who build railroads——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman has information that is misinformation.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. And the men who build railroads in India, in Australia, come here and get the rails.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Why do they build the ships at Belfast?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Well, that is one of those old things that has been established ever since the days of the laws of Oleron, and its antiquity is an argument against its efficiency rather than in favor of it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It is because the rate of wages is so much less than those here that they can do that.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. That is the same old story I have heard four hundred times.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. But it is true.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Do we not pay the men that build the locomotives more than they do at Belfast?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And give them a better locomotive?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. And can not we ship locomotives across the sea and furnish the railroads in Australia? Yes; our locomotives, steel rails, and other manufactures and machinery are both cheaper and better at the prices at which they are sold abroad.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Yes; because they want the latest and best pattern.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. What is the reason, then, we can not, with the same skilled labor, and more iron, and charcoal, and coal, and greater ingenuity and everything—what is the reason we can build everything else on the globe except a ship? [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Because——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Wait a moment; I have not concluded. Has the gentleman from Michigan forgotten that this country has been furnishing Bessemer steel, and furnishing armor plate for the Kaiser, and for all the other crowned heads of the world? We do everything better than they do, because we pay our laborers better prices than they do.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is the meat in the cocoanut.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will now allow me just a sentence or two, I will give him an idea that will be exceedingly valuable to him in the further elucidation of this subject, for I will assure him he will have occasion to look further into it——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I need a great deal of light. Go ahead.

Mr. GROSVENOR. One of the leading differences in the cost of the American ship and ships constructed in the yards of Europe lies in the fact that we have so small a demand for ships, or so occasionally require to build a ship, that we are deprived of the great benefit of what is called "standardizing" the ships. English yards standardize perhaps forty ships in the Belfast yard or the Clyde yard.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Now, I only yielded for a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I beg your pardon. If that is all, I have trespassed upon the gentleman's time. I said I would like to make that much of a statement. Standardizing a ship allows the manufacturer to make forty alike, forty keels alike, and so on, and that is really the great difference.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, that is the old, old story.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no; it is the new story.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. There is no such thing as building ships according to any stereotyped form.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then Mr. Olcott, of the yard down here, told a falsehood to the committee in the hearings the other day.

MR. GILBERT of Kentucky. I have the statement of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1893, in which he demonstrates, and furnishes the figures to show, that we build ships on the Great Lakes cheaper than they do on the Clyde, the Mersey, at Belfast, or anywhere else.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We are not talking about that now.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio has been informed several times that in the old countries they have a certain standardizing of ships; that they have certain patterns and forms and they build a whole lot of ships of one and the same pattern. I am told, upon further investigation, that is not true. And even if it were true it does not decrease the price of the ships to any material extent. I said at the outset that, in my humble judgment, this bill contains the most vicious piece of legislation that has ever been passed through either end of this Capitol since I have been a Member of Congress. It starts out upon the assumption——

Mr. STANLEY. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. STANLEY. Is it true or not that the American iron which goes into foreign ships is bought at a lower price than the same iron is bought for ships made here in America?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Oh, yes; lower. Everything to the American consumer is higher than the price abroad. We are selling everything that enters into the manufacture of a ship and shipping it across the sea and selling it to the foreign consumer cheaper than the same manufactured articles are delivered to the American consumer. They have been bowing and worshiping this Republican god of the home market until it has become a desolater to the consumer.

The features of this bill are pernicious even if my other premises are unsound. The proposition is that our ships can not sail the seas and can not carry the products of the farms and factories because the other ships are subsidized and ours are not, and yet they propose by this bill to subsidize only the steamships that have a thousand tons register and sailing ships of 200 tons, and they do not propose to subsidize the other ships at all, and the ships that do receive the subsidy are to be subsidized for the first ten years of their lives, and then, like an old plow horse that has been faithful through many a cropping season, is to be turned out upon the commons to die without a single bundle of oats.

The new ship is to be subsidized for ten years. Experts tell me that the average life of a merchant vessel is twenty years; so for the first half of its life, while it is young and vigorous and can compete it receives this pernicious subsidy, but at the end of the ten years it will have to go battling across the sea in its old age without any subsidy at all. If it be true that our ships can not carry the commerce of the world because the other ships are subsidized and ours are not, pray tell me why and how it is that those ships under this new bill, which are not to be subsidized at all, are to compete with the ships that do receive the subsidy?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Oh, certainly; if the gentleman from Maine does not become too prolix in his questions.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will try not to be.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to the gentleman's statement as to the sale of steel and iron abroad for shipbuilding purposes at prices cheaper than they are sold at home, I would like to have the gentleman, if it is convenient, place in the RECORD the instances he has in his mind upon which he bases his statement. I will not ask the gentleman to state them now, but to put the information in the RECORD.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman from Maine is familiar with that whole discussion. It occupied a great deal of time in the Senate, and the Democratic members of the Senate claimed, and still claim, that they established to their satisfaction and to the satisfaction of the Democrats of the whole country that Mr. Carnegie and others were manufacturing armor plate and shipping it to Berlin and St. Petersburg and London and delivering it there to the shipbuilders and the governments on the other side of the ocean at from $100 to $125 per ton cheaper that the same article was being delivered here in this country.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Armor plate does not have any earthly connection with the merchant marine.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I understand that, except to this extent, that the same country that can make everything else except a merchant vessel, and can make the most expensive and difficult parts of a naval vessel, would probably be able to build the balance of a merchant vessel.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My question is, Can you give any specific instances, so that we can ascertain the facts, upon which you base your assertion that manufacturers of steel going into the construction of merchant vessels sell their products abroad cheaper than they sell them at home? Or do I infer that the gentleman bases that upon the general assertion made by Democrats in another body, an assertion that has proved to be satisfactory to Democrats elsewhere, and that that is all there is to it? If that is all there is of it, of course, we know what there is to it.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine always starts out as if he were going to ask a question, but he invariably stops before he gets through with the question and goes on with a speech.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon if I have transgressed the proper limits of debate or interruption.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The gentleman from Maine knows perfectly well (it is a matter of notorious information) that we are selling steel rails and armor plate and locomotives and timber and the materials that go into ships, selling them in foreign markets cheaper than we are selling the same things here at home.

Mr. SPIGHT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he has read the testimony taken by the Merchant Marine Commission, and especially that of the superintendent of the Union Iron Works, the largest shipbuilding plant on the Pacific coast——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. SPIGHT (continuing). In which he said that he had himself found the fact to exist, by a personal visit to a foreign shipyard, that the very same materials, steel materials which enter into the construction of a merchant vessel, are shipped across the water and sold there much cheaper than they are sold to our own people at home? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. While the gentleman is looking up his notes, if he will allow me, I will state that I made a personal visit to a shipyard, that of Harlan & Wolff, and I talked with Mr. Carlisle, the managing director, after having gone through his yard, where they had under construction nine or ten great ships. I asked him if they were in the habit of purchasing American steel manufactured for constructive purposes in his business, and he told me, and I will state it to you frankly, that about five years ago they purchased one lot amounting to about $50,000, and that is the only lot they had ever purchased in that great shipyard, and were not purchasing any now. I am giving you the benefit of the facts I ascertained at Harlan & Wolff's yard. Of course, I hope the gentleman believes I do not wish to disturb the course of his remarks.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The fact which I have stated is conceded in the report of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am not responsible for the report of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I would like to ask this: If the gentleman has any specific facts, I think the committee would like to have them. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I am trying to be fair.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman relies upon the facts stated in the report of the committee, that settles it. I did not know but that the gentleman had some specific facts upon which he based his general assertion.

Mr. SPIGHT. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. For a question.

Mr. SPIGHT. I want to make a statement——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Make it short.

Mr. SPIGHT (continuing). In reply to the gentleman from Maine. The superintendent of the Union Iron Works, to whom I referred just now, in testifying said he was not a Democrat, but a Republican. He stated that while in a foreign shipyard in 1900 he saw a cargo of steel for shipbuilding being unloaded from a vessel from New York, sold by the Carnegie Company, and delivered in the foreign yard at about $12 per ton cheaper than he was buying the very same material from the same company for use in his yards at San Francisco.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I do not care to dilate or to dilute that proposition any more. I have practiced law long enough to know with what skill and ingenuity the members of corporations can present their side of the case. I do not care what the distinguished shipbuilder in Belfast told the gentleman from Maine; I never will believe the peculiar paradox that he presents. Here is a country said to be the most intelligent and ingenious, constructing every other conceivable article cheaper and better than any country in the world, and yet it must fall down and go to Belfast or the Clyde or the Mersey to get a first-class ship. I can not believe such a preposterous proposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the facts are against the theory, so much the worse for the facts. That is the gentleman's position.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I think that the incontrovertible facts are on my side on that proposition. I remember that the special committee in its report to the House of Commons states that the ships purchased by J. Pierpont Morgan and other American capitalists were paid for at large prices, fully as much as those ships were worth, and that committee reports that while they had received orders, as I said, from Germany, from Japan, from Italy and France for 449 first-class ships they had not received a single order from the United States of America.

I do not believe and I never will believe that this country can not build a ship. "There is no divinity that doth hedge about a ship" that prevents the American mechanic from building one when he builds everything else. Going back to where I started, I said a while ago, and several Members around me smiled as if it was a very silly remark, that the ships that were floating the British flag and the German flag were owned by American capitalists, and were not a part of the merchant marine of Germany or England, but were a part of the merchant marine of this country. Inasmuch as the smile seemed to indicate incredulity, I will read from Wheaton's International Law. I remember I read it to a distinguished lawyer, and he said it was an old book and out of date and that I had better get something newer than that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. A fresh edition?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I don't know whether it is a fresh edition or not, but I read the first edition of the Bible [laughter] and it is as true now as it was then. I will read section 340:

By the law of England no ship shall be deemed to be a British ship unless she belongs wholly to owners of the following description: 1. Natural born British subjects. 2. Persons made denizens or naturalized by letters of denization, or by act of Parliament, or the proper authority in any British possession. 3. Bodies corporate established under and subject to the laws of and having their principal place of business in the United Kingdom or some British possession. If any person uses the British flag and assumes the British national character on board any ship owned in whole or in part by any persons not entitled by law to own British ships, for the purpose of making such ship appear to be a British ship, such ship shall be forfeited to Her Majesty.

Now, when the distinguished lawyer said the old book was out of date, I went and got the last book on international law, Oppenheim's International Law. On page 316, volume 1, it says:

Some countries, like Great Britain and Germany, allow only such vessels to sail under their flag as are the exclusive property of their citizens or of corporations established on their territory.

Sir R. Giffen, K. C. B., a naval expert, thus presents this question:

These foreign ships which are held by them (American citizens and corporations) under a foreign flag are still under the protection of the United States Government as a matter of property. The United States Government recognizes that American citizens have an interest in these ships and are quite prepared to defend those interests. To some extent these American-owned ships under the British flag and under other foreign flags are really to all intents and purposes American ships and will be so treated by the United States Government in many questions that may arise.

That would apply, of course, to the White Star case; they no doubt remain ships under the British flag, but they are ships with a difference, and in certain cases there is no doubt that the United States Government would claim them, or I should imagine so, as American ships.

Now, the Commissioner of Navigation says that the Leland Line, of 44 ships, is floating the British flag, and the Atlantic Transport Company, of 17 ships, is under the British flag, the Oil Tank Line, 14 ships, and so forth and so on. There are 136 first-class merchant vessels plying between our ports and European markets, all of them floating either the British or the German flag.

They are a part of our merchant marine. Now, the gentleman from Maine knows this difference, that when a battle ship goes abroad it is a part of the domain; that as long as you are under the flag of an American battle ship you are, in legal technology at least, on American soil, but that a merchant vessel, like an automobile, belongs as an incident to the citizenship of the owner. You take one of these ships that are owned by J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., and that ship violates some international neutrality law or any comity arrangement existing between this country and another, or between England and some other country, the British Government owes that ship no protection; that ship must look for its protection to the nationality of the owner of the ship and not to the British Empire; so that when I said a while ago we have the largest and the most profitable and the most flourishing merchant marine of any country on the globe I included this numerous list of magnificent steamers that are purchased by American capitalists, owned and operated by American citizens and American corporations, and float a foreign flag.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended until he can conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then I ask the chairman of the committee to yield him five minutes longer.

Mr. HAY. I would like to yield the gentleman more time, but I have promised to yield to somebody else.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Can not you yield ten minutes?

Mr. HAY. I have only twelve minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has control of the time.

Mr. HAY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for ten minutes. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I be allowed to say in the beginning——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I shall be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to say I agree with you perfectly on your legal propositions.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, the whole thing depends upon the nationality of the corporation. I infer the corporations owning these vessels to which you have referred——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. The main argument that is addressed to us is that they are seeking to appeal to our patriotism, these ship-subsidy grabbers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to ask you this question: Is it not a fact—I so understand it, I may be wrong—that these corporations to whom you have referred are British corporations?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. By no means.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is not the fact; they are organized in this country, as you understand it?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. It may be they have branch offices in London or some other foreign city.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I may be entirely mistaken, but I had the impression they were. Of course if you are right that changes it.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I took pains to go through Lloyd's Register, and to my utter amazement I found thousands of ships, it seemed to me—I do not remember the number now—that are owned in America, owned by American corporations and floating a foreign flag. Why, if we pass this bill the Standard Oil Company will get a subsidy on fifteen ships. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Great Northern Railroad will get $100,000 subsidy on each one of the ships that it has built for its own business as a common carrier from Seattle to Japan and Hongkong.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it your understanding that these ships to which you have now referred are registered as American vessels? I do not understand it that way.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Every ship that is engaged in the over-sea trade is a registered ship.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But are those to which you referred—that is, these hundred and twenty odd you have spoken of—registered as American vessels? Do you so understand it? I do not so understand it, although you may be right.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I am not arguing that these ships will get the subsidy. I put that proposition in to show the extent, the magnitude, and the flourishing condition of the American merchant marine, and that they were inexcusable in coming here and undertaking to get Congress to believe that the ships were decaying in the docks.

Mr. WALDO. They must all have a foreign register.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then they are foreign vessels.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. We have gone over that. The fact that they are under a foreign flag means nothing at all. It simply means that, having been purchased in a foreign market, they are not entitled to American registry.

Mr. WALDO. That is exactly what I mean.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. But that carries no legal right and no protection and no privilege which they did not have before.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the gentleman understands that they are not owned by foreign corporations, but by domestic corporations?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. They must be British subjects, or British corporations, to be registered under the British flag at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But if it is a foreign corporation, organized abroad and having its office abroad, it is a foreign corporation and a foreign owner.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. So that, in order to get under the German flag or the British flag, they have got either to expatriate or they have got to evade those laws, and I do not know how it is done.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They can organize abroad, I suppose. Take a ship like the Baltic, made at Belfast, and floating the English flag, and owned by American capital, and that is what the gentleman from Kentucky refers to. The question is whether it is corporate ownership or individual ownership.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one other suggestion before my time expires, and that relates to something peculiar, which is that all these subsidy bills come before Congress so worded and so shaped up that the ships that commonly carry the commerce of the seas do not get the subsidies. The subsidy goes chiefly to the shipping trusts—to a few capitalists and millionaires. Now, here is a statement from the last annual report of the Commissioner of Navigation: Here are 84 Atlantic steamers, with 156,000 gross tons, with a crew of 2,368 men, that get under this bill $350,471, whereas 626 sailing vessels, with 312,427 gross tons, with a crew of 3,008 men, only get $95,385.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If I understand your argument, it is that the way to rehabilitate the America merchant marine is to repeal the American registry laws?

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I have not said anything about that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You want foreign-built ships to fly our flag, and they can not do it under the American registry.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. My idea is to build up the marine in the same way as the building up of the American industries in every particular—that is, to paddle your own canoe and get away from Congress, and stop depending upon begging subsidies that have proved pernicious in every country in the world. [Applause.] France began this system of subsidies first, and she has pursued it with the greatest pertinacity, and she is to-day paying twice as much as any other country in the world for ship subsidies. And the truth is that her merchant marine is declining all the time. The French are not a seafaring people. Why, take the little countries up yonder in Scandinavia. Ever since the days of the Norsemen the ships of Sweden and Norway have been seen in every clime, the sails of their merchantment whiten every sea; and yet they receive no subsidy at all.

Mr. Chairman, there is no ground of economy or any other solid base upon which this subsidy can be defended. The truth is that our ships have not decayed; or, if they have decayed at all, it is because our young men have quit the sea for better occupations and refuse to return by reason of the low pay and the hard life and the want of opportunity for advancement. All the changes in our navigation laws seem to be made in the interest of the shipowner, and year after year they are made more and more objectionable to the seamen. Here is an extract from the Coast Seamen's Journal of January 31, 1906, by Mr. Andrew Furuseth, an experienced sailor, which helps to explain the situation:

> To get the cheapest possible crew became a matter of serious importance to the owner, and such legislation as was against this was sought to be repealed and later on resisted. The owner found that the law of March 3, 1813, provided that all of the crew and officers must be citizens. In the act of May 31, 1830, he succeeded in having this reduced to the officers and two-thirds of the crew, and in the act of June 28, 1864, he succeeded in having all regulations about the crew, exclusive of the officers, stricken out, so that he would have the whole world to draw from.
> Being now unfettered as to citizenship, nationality, or race, and being careless as to skill, he could cut wages or resist effectually any increase, especially with the help of the laws providing imprisonment for desertion and giving the right to reclaim deserters, which had been provided for in all the treaties entered into, either of extradition or of commerce. Even these laws proved insufficient because of the constantly increasing wages on shore and the unwillingness of the American citizen to go into a calling in which he was looked upon and treated as a slave, and in which wages (that is, what these will buy in the market) had been so reduced that he could no longer support a family. The owner then depended upon foreigners exclusively, and ceased to carry boys. He encouraged crimping and did all he could to prevent any effective legislation against it, and in the act of June 26, 1884 (sec. 20), he obtained permission to sign his crews in a foreign port to go back to a foreign port, without reshipment in the United States.
> Native seamen had by this time become so scarce that the small Navy was filled by foreigners, and a cry was raised against the danger in which this state of things placed the country. The shipowner promptly came forward with a remedy: "Give us a subsidy."

Why, Mr. Blaine, a great man, made the statement that we were paying $110,000,000 a year in gold to foreign countries to carry our merchandise across the sea. Is not that better than for us to pay $250,000,000 in ship subsidies or in higher freight rates in order to save that $110,000,000?

I have gone to the expense and trouble, as I said, of trying to get some information from original sources upon the subject of this subsidy. I started in believing that Japan was subsidizing at an enormous rate and that Japan was driving our ships from the Pacific. When I went over and got at their bill and their figures, to my astonishment I found last year we paid our ships carrying the mail alone more than the Japanese paid for carrying the mails and all the subsidies put together.

Now, as I am permitted to proceed, I will endeavor to substantiate the statements I have been making. Here is a table showing a list of 136 large steamers, which are really a part of our mercantile marine, although floating foreign flags; and many ships in addition to this list have been thus added since 1901, when our Commissioner of Navigation published this list.

American ownership under foreign flags.

Name.	Flag.	American interest.	Number of steamships.	Gross tonnage.
Leyland Line	British	J. P. Morgan, New York	44	277,379
Atlantic Transport	do	B. N. Baker, Baltimore	17	123,593

Fortuna Steamship Co.	do	Daniel Bacon, New York.	1	2,965
Merritt & Chapman	British	Merritt & Chapman	1	374
Total			136	672,455

I also file tables taken from the last annual report of the Commissioner of Navigation, page 35, showing that the subsidy will go chiefly to certain fast steamers, and also another statement showing that the present bill purposes to charge the Government with $2,665,000, an allowance for certain additional mail routes, making a total for the ten years for this service alone of $26,650,000.

Vessels.	Number.	Tons.	Crew.	Subsidy.
Atlantic Ocean:
Steam vessels	82	156,805	3,268	$350,471.00
Sailing vessels	626	312,247	3,068	95,385.50
Pacific Ocean:
Steam vessels	133	255,312	5,952	421,308.48
Sailing vessels	209	183,340	2,564	79,675.50
Total	1,050	907,704	14,852	946,840.48

It is entirely within bounds, accordingly, to state that on the basis of actual American navigation in the foreign trade by salt water during the calendar year 1904 the subventions payable under section 2 of the bill would not exceed $1,000,000. If the measure were to prove efficacious in promoting foreign voyages of American vessels, naturally this amount would increase, though it could not increase greatly or rapidly without a considerable increase in the output of American shipyards.

Section 6 of the bill provides for certain specified mail routes, generally on the alternative basis of monthly or fortnightly service. These rates may be summarized as follows:

Postal table.	Monthly.	Fortnightly.
1. Brazil	$150,000	$300,000
2. Uruguay and Argentina	187,500	375,000
3. South Africa	187,500	375,000
4. Gulf—Brazil	137,500	275,000
5. Gulf—Cuba	75,000	75,000
6. Gulf—Central America	75,000	75,000
7. Gulf—Mexico	50,000	50,000
8. San Francisco, Hawaii, Asia, Philippines	300,000	600,000
9. Puget Sound, Asia, Philippines	210,000	420,000
10. San Francisco, Panama	120,000	120,000
Total	1,492,500	2,665,000

I have heretofore stated that the freight rates in the foreign trade are going down year by year, and here is a tabulated statement in proof of that fact:

The following table shows the gross tonnage of the merchant marine of the twelve leading countries of the world, but this statement is unfair to this country in two respects. First, because the gross tonnage is in no sense an indication of the amount of business done or the amount of freight carried; and in the second place, this statement is unfair because it excludes that vast number of ships which belong to American citizens, but operated under foreign flags:

The following tables confirm what I have heretofore stated as to the total amount of subsidies paid and the total number of ships receiving the subsidies in the British Empire. It will be seen that there are only 35 ships in all, and only £712,376 12s. 7d. paid.

On page 10 of the report filed in 1902 by the British naval experts it is said:

Your committee after due consideration is of the opinion that the principle of subsidy by or for the Admiralty is only justified for obtaining a limited number of vessels of the size, speed, and great endurance among the mercantile marine, built according to Admiralty requirements, for purposes of national defense, provided that the Admiralty finds it more economical to subsidize swift merchant steamers than to build naval ships.

On page 11 that committee further reports:

Your committee do not think that an Admiralty subsidy to a mercantile vessel is of any use merely as a retaining favor in time of war, and are of the opinion that no subsidy should be paid on that ground.

On page 13 of that report, speaking of subsidies in general, that committee reports as follows:

In this connection, the influence of subsidies upon British trade was considered by some of the witnesses with particular regard to the control which might possibly be exercised over the methods of manning the mercantile marine by means of a system of subsidizing, so as to secure also a more effective supply of seamen for the royal navy. It has been especially suggested that sailing ships should receive a subsidy with this object. Your committee, however, have not been able to learn that foreign governments have taken active steps toward a general system of subsidizing for the training of seamen, nor is your committee prepared to say that a subsidy of this kind is desirable.

Yet in the light of this experience we have a bill pending which purposes to pay extra wages to the officers and crew of every little fish boat of over 200 gross tons. I would like to know what the crew upon one of these little boats would learn to enable them to manage a large naval vessel in time of war. That committee of naval experts, after two years of patient investigation, further report that subsidies are the minor factor and commercial skill and industry the major factors of the recent development of the shipping and trade of certain foreign countries, and notably of Germany, where, for example, the granting of through bills of lading via the State railways has added an important effect, while in some other countries subsidies have led to no satisfactory results; that the subsidies given by foreign governments to selected lines or owners tend to restrict free competition and so to facilitate the establishment of the federations and shipping rings, and therefore that no subsidy should be granted without Government control of maximum rates of freight and over this combination of subsidized with unsubsidized owners to restrict competition; that the competition of British shipowners with their commercial rivals upon fair conditions, without Government interference by way of subsidies or by way of control of freights, is more healthy and likely to be more beneficial to the nation and Empire than a state-subsidized and state-controlled system, under which the shipowner would have to depend less upon his individual energy and skill and more upon the favor and support of the Government; that a general system of subsidy other than for service rendered is costly and inexpedient.

It is impossible in a speech to give the abundant sources of these conclusions, but I commend to the consideration of everyone who is seeking light upon the subject to read the testimony and examine the tables presented by these naval experts. I must be allowed, however, to trespass a little further and call the attention of gentlemen to a history of shipping subsidies just issued by Mr. Royal Meeker. The author says that during the time while the Cunard Line was enjoying monopoly of Government favor its rivals distanced it, so far as improvements were concerned, and competed successfully despite of or because of Government favoritism. The mail payments made it possible for the Cunard Line to cling to an out-of-date and uneconomical type of steamer. Mr. Henry Frye, in his history of the North Atlantic steam navigation (p. 81) says:

For thirty years they (Cunard) have never altered the saloons, the stateroom, the bill of fare, the meal hours; they had no smoking rooms, no piano, and but an apology for a ladies' cabin. In truth, for a time they seemed to have entered into an evil inherent in all monopolies. Unbroken success made them overconfident, and they now received a rude awakening. The White Star boats beat them not only in speed, but in comfort and conveniences, and it became evident that the halcyon days of subsidies were nearly over.

It was in pursuance of these facts that in 1902 the British Board of Admiralty decided that the payments to steamship companies by that board were worse than wasted.

I have stated heretofore that the French were the most persistent in their efforts to build up a mercantile marine by way of subsidies, and yet the French statesmen and economists have concluded that the decadence of the French marine has been due to the enormous subsidies paid to the shipping by the Government. According to a report by M. Thierry, during the years from 1886 to 1896 the English increased its steam tonnage by 53 per cent; Germany by 107 per cent; Spain by 30 per cent; Holland by 37 per cent; Italy 68 per cent; Russia 65 per cent; Norway 191 per cent; Sweden 64 per cent; Austria 60 per cent; Denmark 76 per cent; Portugal 110 per cent; Greece 158 per cent; Roumania 7 per cent; Japan 231 per cent; while the French steam tonnage has diminished 1 per cent, or 5,347 tons. On page 212 Mr. Meeker calculates that about 2 per cent of the British mercantile marine received subsidies from the Government and are bound by contract to sail on prescribed routes with certain time limits, and that a somewhat larger portion of the German marine is so situated, and that 6 per cent would be a liberal estimate of all the German marine that receives any subsidy at all. National commerce is very secondary with these Governments in the payment of subsidy to these particular ships, and that the disadvantage of being compelled to sail regularly over the same definite course, with or without cargo, and to perform other valuable service for the Government, make it necessary in order to equalize these particular ships that they should receive this compensation, not as a bounty at all, but as payment for public service rendered.

The Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, now Speaker of this honorable body, discussed this subject as early as 1879, and speaking at that time he uses this significant language: "Beginning with the year 1847 down to the present time we have paid out of the Treasury over $21,000,000 for the purpose of establishing steamship lines. Seven million dollars would buy all of the steamship lines engaged in commerce that sail under the American flag on every ocean, and, more than that, the subsidy of these steamship lines, from the Collins Line in 1850 up to the present time, has bankrupted every prominent man that has favored it."

The tonnage of American and foreign vessels which entered and cleared in the foreign trade in 1904, and also in 1905, shows of American 6,679,173 and foreign 23,273,237 tons, showing that we carried 22 per cent of all our exports and imports, and yet you have heard it said repeatedly that we are carrying only 8 or 10 per cent of our commerce. All of our commerce could be carried and would be carried in our own ships if the trade was as profitable as the coastwise trade, but the trouble is, or rather the great blessing is, that the oceans are the common highway for all the ships of all the world, and we can not extend our laws of protection to our ships, but must leave them to compete with the ships of other countries. We can extend American laws and protection to the coastwise trade, and for that very reason the freight rates in coastwise trade are very much higher than they are in the foreign trade, while the freight rates across the sea are in fact going down year after year. We are presented here in this bill with the strange proposition and complaint that the freight rates in the foreign trade are too low and we must make them higher; or, which is the same thing in substance, we are asked in this bill to tax ourselves sixty-odd millions of dollars in order that the ships under the American flag shall be enabled to carry our commerce at the present low rates.

A large part of this session has been devoted to the enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so as to prevent railroads from making exorbitant charges and to force the railroads to charge only fair and reasonable rates. We did this, too, in the face of the conceded fact that the average railroad rates in this country were lower than they were in any other country of the world. Now, everybody admits that coastwise rates are much higher than over-sea rates, and we are asked to leave the high coastwise rates untouched, and virtually the proposition is to increase the rates in our foreign trade. Complaints came from farms and factories that railroad rates were too high in certain instances, and we have been struggling all session how best to reduce and regulate these railroad rates. But now as to freight rates across the seas, no complaints have come from either farm or factory, but the carriers themselves are here complaining that the rates are too low, and we are asked to make them higher, or, which is the same thing in substance, we are asked to put an additional tax of many millions upon farm and factory, in order that our ships can continue to charge no more than the present low rates.

England and Germany are our two great rivals in the ocean carrying trade, and neither of them pays any bounties at all in the sense contemplated by this bill. Germany has rigid contracts with two lines of steamers, the North German Lloyd Line—to eastern Asia and Australia and China—and also with the East African Line. There are only 130 ships altogether in these two so-called "subsidized lines," of 553,287 gross tons. The German Empire has 6,153 ships, of 3,704,697 gross tons, so that 130 ships, of 553,287 tons, received the so-called "bounty," and 6,023, with 3,151,410 tons, received no bounty. Then, too, Germany remits tariff duties on cost and material intended to be used in the construction of ships, just as we do under the same circumstances under the Dingley tariff. Then, again, Germany owns and operates her railroads, and goods carried over them and consigned for the foreign trade on these two lines of ships are carried on the railroads at cost, yet the rates on German railroads, even after this deduction, are higher than the freight rates on our railroads. The reduction in railroad rates in Germany is only 50 per cent from the usual price, still leaving the rate on the railroads higher than ours, even where the effort is made to favor these ships. Indeed, the great loads of horses and fat cattle shipped from Kentucky to Liverpool or to any other foreign port are shipped on the through rate, by rail and steamer, to their destination, and so it is with all of our cotton, grain, and other articles of export.

The same rule applies to our imports designated to interior points; and this is all there is to the great clamor made by the shipowners about German bounties to ships and German ships driving ours out of the foreign trade. There are no general direct subsidies paid to ships in the German Empire at all. The two lines of steamers above named are instruments of the Government. The ships are required to be built in a certain way, dictated by the minister of marine; they are required to make certain long-distance journeys at a certain speed. One line is required, as I stated, to circumnavigate the entire continent of Africa on every trip, going in opposite direction on each alternate trip, and to stop at certain seaports. The other line is required to go to Australia and to China and Japan upon every trip and to make a certain speed. Both lines are required to carry officers, soldiers, sailors, Government stores, mails, etc., free of charge. The Government fixes the freight rate and the passenger rate and requires each line to build at least five ships every year, and, after all that, all the profits over 5 per cent are turned into the treasury of the Government. For these extra services a total of £342,000 are paid annually, and if you will examine these rigid contracts you will find merely an agreement to pay a stipulated price for valuable services, and that these are in no sense bounties at all.

Now, look at the last annual report of our Postmaster-General, and you will find that we paid last year to our ships for transporting the foreign mails the sum of $2,693,812, or $993,812 more than Germany paid for all ship bounties and mail contracts put together. Not a ship of Germany that enters our ports receives a single dollar of subsidy, except where it comes to our ports in exchange for a North German Lloyd steamer, and yet it is the second great power of the world in our foreign trade.

AUSTRIA.

Now, let us look at Austria-Hungary for a moment, and we find the Austrian Lloyd Line receives for voyages in the Adriatic and Mediterranean 3½ florins per mile when making 11½ knots per hour; 240 florins per hour when making 10 knots per hour. Then for ocean voyages, at an average speed of 11 knots an hour, 280 florins an hour; for voyages between Trieste and Samos and for other voyages, 170 florins an hour. Certain dues at the Suez Canal are also paid by the Austrian Government. Then there is what is called a trading bounty, which amounts to 6 florins per ton for iron or steel steamers; 450 florins per ton for iron or steel sailing vessels; 3 florins per ton for wooden or composite ships. These bounties decrease 5 per cent annually, and are discontinued at the end of fifteen years. A florin is about equal to 41 cents, and the maxim limit allowed by the Government is £242,500, or about $1,212,500. These ships of Austria-Hungary, like those of Germany, are required to carry the mails and do many other things for the Government, and what is called a bounty is merely the agreed price for Government work. Yet the amount of the so-called bounties of that country, carrying the mails and all the other services rendered for the Government by the ships, are less than one-half of the amount this country pays every year to our ships for carrying the mails alone.

HOLLAND.

Holland pays no subsidies at all. The only contracts between the Government and the shipping industry provide for the payment of certain amounts for carrying the mails and for certain stipulated services to be rendered to the Government by the shipowners. The total amount provided by law for all the ships is 919,712 florins, or about $377,081. A large bounty was paid years ago of 684,728 florins at so much a trip for the special line of steamers to the Dutch East Indies; but this, like all other bounties, proved to be of no value and has been discontinued, and yet Holland has for centuries been one of the most successful seafaring nations of the world.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

These countries pay for carrying the mails 178,800 kronor, or $49,665, and other subventions to ships, $91,665. In Sweden separately there are paid five lines 302,740 kronor, or $84,095. These sums constitute only a small fraction of what we pay the ships of this country for carrying the mails alone, and yet for centuries the Scandinavian ships and shipowners have been found in every harbor, and the merchant vessels of Sweden and Norway have sailed into every port.

ENGLAND.

Oh, but England is the mistress of the seas, say these beggars for bounty, and England can build and operate ships cheaper than we can, and England is, by her bounties, driving our ships from the ocean, and we can not compete with the ships of England in the foreign trade; such is the tone of articles seen daily in the papers and pamphlets sent to you through the mails. Now, the truth is that we build ships just as cheap as they do in England. Lloyd's Register for 1905, page 485a, shows that England built last year for other countries 117 large ships, of 209,111 gross tons, but none of them was built for this country.

Our Commissioner of Navigation, in his report for 1905 (p. 9), shows that we built, as we have stated, 1,102 ships last year of 330,316 gross tons. I don't care what the interested witnesses said who came before the Merchant Marine Commission, I have practiced law long enough to know with what skill employees of corporations can present their master's case in court as well as out of it. The facts shown by that register that England's shipyards are busy constructing ships for almost every other country in the world, and yet no orders to build any ships were given by this country, and the additional fact that we build so many at home is a conclusive answer, in my mind, at least to the objection that we can not build ships here at home. The tramp steamers of the seas have crews made up of negroes and Chinese, and they are carrying our commerce cheaper than our own people are willing to carry it, and it is no calamity to have that class of work done by people who will work cheaper than our American citizens are willing to labor. You must understand also that most all of the great lines of ships are owned by corporations, and that these corporations naturally seek to complicate the legal status and situation of their business, so as to make the obedience to the laws of any country as difficult as possible. It is a compliment to our country, rather than a reflection upon it, that its rich lands, wide territory, and broad opportunities furnish our people safer, more comfortable, and more profitable employment than operating the tramp steamers that are carrying our products across the seas. And there is nothing peculiar in the fact that our citizens are buying ships in foreign countries and are operating them under foreign flags.

JAPAN.

We have heard of late nearly as much about ship bounties in Japan as we have about these bounties in England and Germany, but in point of fact, up to June, 1897, Japan had only four ships that had passed the rigid examination required by the Government to entitle them to navigation bounties, and the amounts paid up to that time were quite small. Under the present law of Japan, there is a small construction bounty paid. For example, ships over 700 tons and under 1,000 tons, get 12 yen per ton, and vessels of over 1,000 tons, get 20 yen per ton, and engines get 5 yen per horsepower. These bounties amounted, in 1899, to only 277,250 yen. Then in addition three lines of steamers in the Government service were paid for carrying the mails, and for their governmental services, a total of £443,224, or $2,116,120, and altogether these bounties were less than our ships received for carrying the mails alone. But in the spring of 1900 new contracts were made and a bounty of £59,208 was agreed to be paid for certain lines to China and Korea; £29,793 to be paid to steamers for the Yangtse line, and three other lines also received subsidies—one to Europe, one to San Francisco, and one to Seattle. But all the subsidies paid by Japan, even under the new law, amounted to a total of £673,697, or $3,368,485, and this sum is still less than we paid our ships and steamboats for carrying the mails alone. We paid to ships and steamboats alone, last year, $3,379,403.34 for carrying the mails. The Japanese ships, like those of Russia and Germany and England, which receive these so-called "bounties," perform many valuable services to the Government, in addition to carrying mails, and they are bound up by rigid contracts, under bond with security, for the faithful performance of the stipulations of these contracts.

Now, having attempted to show the folly of the contention that foreign bounties have driven our ships from the sea, let us turn our attention to the peculiar provisions of the pending bill. This bill provides for the enrollment of officers and sailors who are American citizens into what is called the "naval reserve." They are to enlist for four years, and agree to serve the country in time of war upon the call of the President. These officers and seamen are to be paid certain salaries, in addition to their regular wages, at the end of each year, but if they serve for six months they get the whole year's salary, and if they are merely enrolled and render no services at all they get one-half of the yearly salary. It is difficult to tell what the expense to the Government will be under this first section of the bill. The committee of the Senate reports that it would be $150,000 the first year, $300,000 the second year, $400,000 the third year, and $500,000 the fourth year. But this committee makes no estimate as to subsequent years. Of course the amount will continue to increase from year to year so long as the easy snap for the seamen and the unwise burden upon the taxpayer remains upon the statute books, or at least until the end of the ten-year period provided by the terms of the bill. But assuming that the cost will continue to increase in the ratio above admitted, the total cost for ten years under this section alone will be $6,450,000. But the Commissioner of Navigation (report for 1905, p. 36) says it is not possible, except in the crudest sort of way, to make even an approximate estimate of what the cost will be under this first section.

Then, under section 2, after January 1, 1907, American vessels engaged in the foreign trade are to be paid $5 per gross registered ton when engaged for twelve months; $4 per gross ton when engaged in the foreign trade for nine months, and $2.50 per gross ton when engaged in the foreign trade for six months. This applies to all the ships that float the American flag which are engaged in the foreign trade. Some of the largest ships will get a donation from the Government of $100,000 each under this section, and many of them will get $50,000 or $60,000 apiece every year. No particular services are required to be rendered; no particular amount of cargo is required to be carried, and no rate of speed is demanded at all. There is an evident effort to make it appear that the ships are required to render some services to the Government in order to earn this money, but when you examine these provisions it is easily seen that the ships really agree to do nothing that is either valuable or important.

First. In case of war the owners agree that the Government can take the ships for public use by paying a just compensation. Everybody knows that this provision adds nothing whatever to the law.

Second. The ships shall carry the mails of the United States whenever required by the Postmaster-General. But inasmuch as other sections of the bill provide for the establishment of many new over-sea mail routes and mail lines, for which large sums are to be paid expressly for carrying the mails to all the leading foreign centers of trade and population, and especially as these bounty-fed ships mentioned in section 2 are permitted to stay in any foreign port as long as they please and travel as slowly as possible, it is evident that these slow ships will not carry any mail of any amount or importance.

Third. One-sixth of the crew shall be American citizens, and one-half of these shall be able seamen, or who have been on the sea for two years. In other words, two or three men on each ship shall be American citizens or have expressed an intention to become so. This would be a fine way to build up a naval reserve in time of war, indeed, paying the crew who are American citizens increased salary and bounties to the shipowners for every ton of the ship in order to have the possible assistance of two or three of the crew in time of war, thus creating inequalities of pay for the same services rendered by different members of the same crew, creating dissensions, and engendering mutinies on board of every vessel. Every old hull and antiquated sailing vessel is to get this bounty, not in proportion to speed or cargo or for any services rendered the Government, but to be paid by the length of time the ship is absent from the home port.

Fourth. Every steam vessel shall be of Class A1, and every sailing vessel shall be of Class A1½, which means merely that they shall be seaworthy. The owners, without any bounty, would do this in order to decrease insurance and preserve their property and cargo from ruin.

Fifth. The vessels shall be repaired in the home port, unless there is no dock within 500 miles, or, if not, they can repair in a foreign port—exactly what they would do anyhow, without the bounty.

Sixth. After July 1, 1908, one-eighth of the crew shall be American citizens or have expressed a desire to be. After July 1, 1912, one-sixth of the crew shall be American citizens, and after July 1, 1917, one-fourth. But the last clause requiring one-sixth and one-fourth will not be enforced, because the bounty expires at the end of ten years, and the contracts are to be made for only one year at a time. So the Government is asked to pay $5 a gross ton and the other sums named to these ships for ten years, to pay all the officers extra salaries in order that one-eighth of the crew may be under a mere promise to join the Navy in time of war. And what services are these members of the crew to render on these slow-going tramp steamers to prepare them for the management of a battle ship? There is not one line in this bill imposing any duty upon any member of any crew to render any services or to undergo any discipline to prepare him to be an efficient member of the naval reserve.

There is not one line in the bill to indicate that these ships are required to render any services whatever to the Government, but ship and crew are to go along, as under the present law, learning no new duties and performing no new services of any character whatever.

Now, what will this section cost? The report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1905 shows that the cost of these subsidies will be, under this section, $1,000,000 the first year (Report for 1905, p. 35), and the Senate committee reports that for the second year this section will cost $1,250,000; for the third year, $1,750,000; for the fourth year, $2,250,000; and so on, increasing at the rate of $500,000 a year for the ten years. So we have an expense, under this section alone, as confessed by the most ardent friend of the bill, of $30,250,000 for the ten years. Here is the exact language of Senate Report No. 10, presented by the chairman of that committee, to accompany this bill (Senate bill 529, p. 15):

"A reasonable estimate, however, is that these general subventions to the hard-working cargo ships, the democracy of the ocean, will continue to increase on an average of about $500,000 a year."

We will find no provision whatever for any hard work or any work to be done, and we will see that this "democracy of the ocean" will get a very small part of the subsidy to be paid.

Now, take this bill and look on page 35 of the Report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1905, and see the figures there presented. You will find 82 steamers, of 156,805 gross tons, on the Atlantic, getting $350,471 in the way of bounty, while 626 sailing ships, with 312,247 tons, only get $95,385 subsidy. Then, if we go to the Pacific Ocean we find 133 steamers, with 255,312 gross tons, will receive $421,308, while 209 sailing vessels will get only $79,675. That is not the worst of it. Under section 6 of this bill many additional mail routes are to be established to carry the mails across the seas, and each of these is given a bounty averaging from $50,000 to $600,000, and making a total for these mail routes of $2,665,000 every year, and for the ten years a total, under this section alone, of $26,650,000. Where is all this money to come from, when you refuse to modify the tariff so as to admit additional imports and so as to furnish a traffic for the ships which float our flag? There is a deficit to-day in the Treasury of the United States, and I want an answer to the question, Where is all of this money to be obtained? So we come back to the starting point and ask you again what sum of money will this bill, in ten years, take out of the Treasury? And the answer made by the ardent friends and supporters of this measure is that it will be more than $60,000,000. But what ships are to get this bounty, aside from the mail subventions above mentioned? The Report of the Commissioner for 1905, page 214, shows that 1,050 ships will get about all of it, and we have seen that the lion's share will go to 215 fast steamers. We have in all, even by this report, 24,681 vessels in our merchant marine, besides those numerous large fleets owned by our citizens and floating the British flag. But say we have only the 24,681 ships; then 1,050 will get the bounty out of the Treasury, and 23,631 will get no bounty at all. The friends of the bill answer that its purpose is to allow all the ships engaged in foreign trade to participate in this donation from the Government. If that be true, then the Great Northern Railroad Company is operating several of the largest-sized steamers across the Pacific, and these will get $100,000 apiece every year, although they are operated by a railroad company for profit, and although the freight rate is fixed by the railroad company from the farm and factory through to the foreign destination of the cargo at a price that enables the railroad company to declare sufficient dividends.

Lloyd's Register for 1905 shows that the Standard Oil Company owns and operates thirty ships in the foreign trade engaged in shipping the oil on which this company fixes the price for all the world, and all of these ships will get bounties under this bill. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company is shown to be operating seventeen ships in the foreign trade. The Central Railroad Company of New Jersey has twenty-four ships. The Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, the Southern Railway Company, and many other railroad companies and corporations own and operate ships in the foreign trade in connection with their other private business.

Let us keep in mind that all the money that goes into the Treasury of the United States comes out of the pockets of the American taxpayers. The Government has not discovered the hidden chest of Captain Kidd; the Government has not discovered the philosopher's stone; the Government has no process by which baser metals can be converted into gold; but that the money in the Treasury represents money paid into the Treasury by the taxgatherer, and we should hesitate to vote $60,000,000 of money when it is not seriously pretended that any benefit will result to those who are thus taxed.

In conclusion, I insist that our merchant marine contains more ships than that of any nation in the world; our merchant marine carries more freight than that of any country in the world; our merchant marine charges higher prices and gets more money for the services rendered than that of any country in the world; our merchant marine charges higher prices for carrying the mails than are charged by any merchant marine in the world; our merchant marine collects higher freight rates, the officers and crew live higher and better, and the shipowners clear more money than any merchant marine in the world, and there is, lastly, less excuse in this country for paying bounties out of the Treasury to shipowners than there is in any country in the world. The shipowners who appeal to our patriotism while floating foreign flags and otherwise jeopardizing American interests, make themselves ridiculous. For instance, many of these shipowners are engaged in a most unpatriotic and nefarious business of importing undesirable immigrants. Before I vote any bounties to these shipowners I want to know how many of them have agents abroad ransacking the prisons and slums and eleemosynary institutions of the Old World, gathering up the criminals and paupers, the illiterates and anarchists, and dumping them down upon our shores. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HULL. I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, if the tide of Congressional statesmanship will flow back a little toward this side, I will occupy only a few moments in trying to say something on this memorable day. Since 12 o'clock to-day we have voted down the Father of his Country and his memory, because it was more important, I assume, that we discuss great questions affecting this nation. Since that vote was taken we have had eloquent addresses here—earnest ones, too—on imminent questions, such as are involved in a pure-food law, in internal revenue, in the matter of Federal liquor licenses, on immigration, on prohibition in Maine and other New England States, and on that other long-worn subject, the tariff, and, lastly, a most eloquent address on the question of ship subsidy in this country and in the world.

These subjects furnish an excuse for not having a holiday in memory of George Washington. But we resolved ourselves into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering an appropriation bill for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907. This is a very good bill, I assume. I find that the total amount to be appropriated by this bill is $69,678,592.88. It is but little below the estimates when they came from the War Department. This fact leads me to believe that the Military Committee have been quite liberal in the matter of making appropriations for that important arm of our Government. We apparently appropriate large sums of money for the maintenance of the Army and the Navy, but we are not armed as the other great powers of the world are armed. We do not need to be in full equipment and armament, so far as the Army is concerned, because in time of war, as in the past—and it will always be so, I hope—we can appeal to the young sovereigns of the land to muster under the flag in defense of our country and to meet any foe on the face of the earth that may come against us. The Army must be liberally treated.

Now, I want to speak of one or two things on which I am not in harmony with the Committee on Military Affairs.

One of them is that provision which is intended to abolish the office of Lieutenant-General. I am not at all certain it will do any great harm if we do that at present. However, I do not think the reasons given by some of the gentlemen are valid ones in support of the proposition to repeal the present law.

It is said that the rank of Lieutenant-General should be abolished because a man could be assigned to the head of the Army as Chief of Staff of the Army who had the rank only of brigadier-general, and that the Lieutenant-General might have to accept orders from the Chief of Staff, his junior in rank. That is not a valid argument, in my opinion. A major-general, who would be at the head of the Army if we have no Lieutenant-General, would be subject to the same inconsistency; and I do not see why we should not have, in time of peace, a Lieutenant-General. We have never kept up the organization of our Army in the United States in its entire framework. It has never been done in the United States and never anywhere else except during the civil war. It was the policy in the Confederate States to have a general to command each army, to have a lieutenant-general for every corps of the army, the general to command every separate army in the field consisting of more than one corps, a major-general for every division of the army, and a brigadier-general for every brigade in the army. That worked out its perfection; and I believe that our Army, now organized as it is, small as it is, must always be to be in perfect order and its whole machinery in readiness to meet any emergency, ought to have a commanding officer. I do not believe in the plan of a staff running the Army, either in peace or war.

If we had a war of any magnitude it would disappear, as it ought to, over the first night. You can not command an army by means of a staff located in a room heated with hot air or steam or hot water. An army is not commanded in that way; and if we had a war we should be compelled to have commanders in the field in close touch with their troops, and who were not under the control of a staff, no matter how good or how great it was.

Mr. HULL. I suppose the gentleman is familiar with the fact that, under our present law, all the staff officers are from the line of the Army and that the staff is really the line?

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that, but it makes no difference who they are or where they come from. If you lock them up in the War Department and ask them to run the Army in the field from there they will all fail. That is the reason I have no particular faith in a staff running the Army of the United States.

But I want to say a word for our officers now in the Army. They are, in my opinion, the best educated, the best trained, and the best in point of morals of any army we have ever had in the history of this country. I believe their education is more complete; I believe their standard of good conduct in every way is better than it ever was before. There is less of drunkenness, less of gambling, and all that sort of demoralizing thing in the Army to-day than there ever was before. The officers are qualified for their positions, graduates mainly of West Point, and when they reach the rank from which they may be appointed to high offices for the purpose of commanding troops, in peace or war, they had grown old and gray. Most of them have had forty years' service. And when I say this, I say it because I have no sympathy with that thing we have heard here to-day so often, that these men who are commissioned and retired as brigadiers have never earned anything.

Think of a man who has devoted his entire life to this service, having laid aside all of his ambition in merchantile and political or other civil life, and devoted himself year in and year out, for forty years or more, to this work, who comes to old age before he may be made a brigadier-general and might be retired. It is not fair or just to these men to say that they have never earned that which may be given him. These officers who have been recently retired, shortly after having been given the rank of brigadier-general, are all men who have performed distinguished service during a period of about forty years or more. Many of them served in the civil war. They have all earned their retired pay, and I have no sympathy with the contrary proposition at all. But I did not intend to spend this much time talking on that point.

I am in favor of the Soldiers' Home provision. It has been well explained by the chairman of the committee. If retired soldiers are not permitted to go to the Home, they should not be taxed twelve and a half cents per month to maintain it, although this is a Home that was near the heart of the great Gen. Winfield Scott.

I am also in favor of the provision with reference to sharpshooters, to pay them well, for in this day, when we have a thin rank or line of battle only, we ought to have good sharpshooters. And we are getting them. We need not worry about that. Our system of target practice is the best in the world. We are making fine marksmen everywhere we keep up that system. Properly keep it up, properly maintain it, and we will have an Army that will be better, because of the long range of our rifles, than the hunters with their squirrel rifles who fought under Jackson on the 8th of January, 1815.

I admit that the fighting of those men attracted the attention of soldiers in the Old World, Napolean Bonaparte among others; but we are now possessed of arms and ammunition far exceeding any they had. They were compelled to wait behind their bales of cotton until they could see the whites of the eyes of the English soldiers before they were allowed to fire. Now we want men to fire with considerable accuracy at 2,000 yards.

There are other provisions in the bill, Mr. Chairman, that I fully indorse. I have no further criticism to make upon it, and think it in general a very good bill.

Now, I hope I may be pardoned for a little digression. On yesterday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] talked on the tariff. He displayed here a great deal of learning. He demonstrated to his own entire satisfaction that under a Republican protective tariff this country had gone to everlasting destruction in all its business interests, and the laboring people had especially been impoverished. But he was immediately followed by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HOPKINS], who was especially eloquent in talking upon the subject of immigration to this country, and with equal powers of speech and of analysis he demonstrated that our conditions here in this country were so peculiarly in the interests of the laboring people that the Austro-Hungarian poor laborer came over here for the purpose only of getting rich, and that through a single bank alone in this country these people who came here in competition with our own people have been able to send over to Hungary $149,000,000 of their earnings to buy 10,000 acres of high-priced lands there. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I was troubled to know what our own Yankee skilled laborers, who can outwork and outmanage the Hungarians in making money and in accomplishing things—I was wondering what these people were doing while the poor Hungarian laborers, which the gentleman from Kentucky denounced as unfit to be in the country, were getting these millions, unless the Yankee laborers were getting a little of these same millions out of the work. [Laughter.] It was troublesome for me to put these two speeches together. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, there is one other thing I want to refer to and I would not do that if it were not for the fact that for the past two months I have heard almost daily somebody quote the last speech of the great McKinley, and say that it was made at Buffalo in advocacy of free trade or something equivalent to it. I heard it yesterday accompanied with a eulogy which for beauty of language I commend to the country; but I want to advert to the singular fact that our brethren on the other side have fallen into a habit of asserting that we are, somewhere back along on the line of our history as Republicans, bound by what somebody else has said. But, waiving that, I want to say that these eulogies of Republican dead are not always very well accepted. The habit is growing on the gentlemen on the other side. [Laughter.] I know that they took up Lincoln shortly after he became a martyr and quoted him, as though they had always believed in him and had never maligned him. They quoted the next murdered President—Garfield. They have been quoting along the line; more recently they are quoting the third martyred President—McKinley. Their progress is exhibited in their recent efforts, not only to make political saints out of the dead Republican statesmen, but they have commenced trying to make a saint out of the present President of the United States by quoting him as good authority on all matters. So they have begun to talk of the living as well as the dead Republicans. [Laughter.] Where, oh, where, are the great deceased Democratic statesmen?

Now, one word more. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HOPKINS] yesterday, inadvertently, I assume, fell into a mistake in the quotation that he made from the Buffalo speech of McKinley. He used the word "present" in his quotation, whereas it was not used in the original speech at all. But he had a good authority for that mistake. When the distinguished leader, Mr. Parker of the Democratic party in 1904 was making a speech in his own campaign on the subject of reciprocity, he professed to quote from the same speech of McKinley, and I say this with the utmost kindness to him that he began by commencing his quotation in the middle of a sentence in order that he might make his point. I will read it. The first of the quotation that he had in his speech commenced:

> We shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus.

That was the first of his quotation. I will read the sentence as it was in McKinley's speech:

> By sensible arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increased surplus, etc.

That includes the beginning of the sentence. But I shall, Mr. Chairman, without taking the time to read it, put into the RECORD the speech of McKinley, or all of it that relates directly to the question of the tariff. It is as follows:

> My fellow-citizens, trade statistics indicate that this country is in a state of unexampled prosperity. The figures are almost appalling. They show that we are utilizing our fields and forests and mines, and that we are furnishing profitable employment to the millions of workingmen throughout the United States, bringing comfort and happiness to their homes, and making it possible to lay by savings for old age and disability. That all the people are participating in this great prosperity is seen in every American community and shown by the enormous and unprecedented deposits in our savings banks. Our duty in the care and security of these deposits and their safe investment demands the highest integrity and the best business capacity of those in charge of these depositories of the people's earnings.
> We have a vast and intricate business, built up through years of toil and struggle, in which every part of the country has its stake, which will not permit of either neglect or undue selfishness. No narrow, sordid policy will subserve it. The greatest skill and wisdom on the part of the manufacturers and producers will be required to hold and increase it. Our industrial enterprises, which have grown to such great proportions, affect the homes and occupations of the people and the welfare of the country. Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention. Only a broad and enlightened policy will keep what we have. No other policy will get more. In these times of marvelous business energy and gain we ought to be looking to the future, strengthening the weak places in our industrial and commercial systems, that we may be ready for any storm or strain.
> By sensible trade arrangements, which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible, it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor. Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development under the domestic policy now firmly established.
> What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have a vent abroad. The excess must be relieved through a foreign outlet, and we should sell everywhere we can and buy wherever the buying will enlarge our sales and productions, and thereby make a greater demand for home labor.
> The period of exclusiveness is past. The expansion of our trade and commerce is the pressing problem. Commercial wars are unprofitable. A policy of good will and friendly trade relations will prevent reprisals. Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.
> If perchance some of our tariffs are no longer needed for revenue or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to extend and promote our markets abroad?

Gentlemen on the other side want reciprocity based on free trade, which means nothing. They want reciprocity that closes our mills and turns our people out on the street as practical beggars, in order that they may go abroad and buy there on some mistaken idea that that will bring the poor people over there to buy flour or meats of us, or other of our productions of field or factory.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What steps has the Republican party taken to carry out the recommendations of Mr. McKinley?

Mr. KEIFER. We have taken steps all the time. We never expect to sell anything over there unless those people want it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What modification of the tariff have you made in respect to any schedule in response to the speech of Mr. McKinley at Buffalo?

Mr. KEIFER. That is the same question substantially as the other one, and it is answered all the time. We sell abroad everything they want to buy, and we buy abroad in the same way. Changes in the laws were not required, but only in business methods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13104. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905; and

H. R. 12864. An act to provide for the purchase of certain coal claims in the island of Batan, in the Philippine Islands.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the time occupied by the very generous applause will not be taken out of my time. [Laughter.] I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, to reply to the discussion by the able gentleman from Kentucky upon the subject of ship subsidies at this time. In due time I will try to show there never has been compressed into an hour more erroneous statements of facts than were made by the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not see how in the world it can be possible for any man to ride looking forward in this world and know so little of what is going on around him. I can imagine a man riding backward and looking at the scenery as he passes it in the rear of the train being thus misled.

I want to refer to the criticism of the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Florida. It is an old story. It is one of the most inconsiderable in the matter of actual expense either of brains or of logic. Whenever you feel a little in doubt about the progress of human events, or any other unpleasant feeling, jump on the Committee on Rules of the House of Representatives and you will relieve your mind, and you will not hurt the Committee on Rules a particle. I was in this House at one time before there was such a thing as the Committee on Rules, as now constituted. It was a Democratic House with a large Democratic majority, and there was a bill pending carrying somewhere in the neighborhood of $11,000,000. We spent eight days and practically eight nights right here, nothing but recesses from day to day—very short ones at that—sometimes beginning at daylight in the morning and taking time only to get breakfast, before we ever got a vote upon the passage of the bill.

That procedure produced the present administration of the Committee on Rules and suggested its necessity. Any one man in that House could delay the action of the House. To-day the Committee on Rules can not delay the action of the House one moment. It can not point out a single limitation and force it upon the House. It can do nothing to affect the action of the House only as the House itself responds to the proposition of the Committee on Rules and enacts into law the utterance of the House and the act of the Committee on Rules itself. There is not so complete a democratic auxiliary of popular administration of legislative government as is the rule of this House that provides for a Committee on Rules and the action of the House upon their report, and a gentleman who has had any considerable experience must know that the Committee on Rules was born of the necessity of going forward, to give the House itself power over refractory Members and dilatory procedure of single and combined membership of the House. Now, the gentleman complains that this is not a House where you can have discussion. I have taken a little pains to ascertain and I find that upon three measures alone during the current session of this House, this first session of this House of Representatives, more time in actual debate was spent—two and a half times more—than was spent in any Democratic House of Representatives since the foundation of the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Ohio if it is not a fact that about ten days of that time during this session was spent in discussing a bill unanimously reported by a committee, Democrats and Republicans alike, for which discussion there was absolutely no necessity and against which bill there were only seven votes?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There was a dire necessity. The Members of the House wanted to make speeches to their constituents, and they had the opportunity. [Laughter.] I made one myself. I do not think it did a particle of good. [Laughter.] Therefore I think the gentleman's suggestion that there was no necessity for it better be changed to say there was no good in it. That would be better.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, I am exceedingly sorry to say that it did not avail in the gentleman's case. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is very kind. Now, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the way the Democratic House occasionally did business during the days when there was a Democratic party in power in this country, with an organization that went forward to do things. The Forty-fifth Congress was a Democratic Congress, and they passed a bill to repeal the resumption act, a bill of very great importance! It was simply to launch this country again upon irredeemable paper money. That was all. And they passed a bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver—another little matter! Since then it has grown into some importance, and has been the rock upon which our Democratic friends have wrecked their ship of state a couple of times, and I think are driving on toward the same reef again—an uncharted reef apparently—and they also passed a sundry civil bill, carrying $20,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors. How much debate do you think there was on those three bills? How much in that enlightened Congress, when there was to be an opportunity, in the language of the eloquent gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], for every man to have a "square deal" and let his constituents know what his action was based upon? There was not one single word of debate upon any one of those three great measures. Why not? Because the House of Representatives adopted the previous question upon each one of the measures and cut off debate. Since that time, under greater enlightenment, they could not have entirely done that, for we would have had twenty minutes on a side after the previous question had been ordered; but in those good old Democratic times if one man demanded the previous question, and the House by a majority of votes agreed with him, not one word of debate could be had. That House, so far as it could, launched this country upon irredeemable paper money, undid all that had been done by the act of resumption, and launched it again upon the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and passed an extravagant appropriation bill, without one word of debate. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, will the gentleman not put into his speech, which was an ably prepared one, just this much?

"But, thank Heaven, the Republican party has lifted the lid and let in debate in this country!" [Applause.]

But let us see, now, what the gentleman proposes. He makes the proposition that every Member of the House now shall debate just as much as he may want to debate. Why, I hold in my hand thirty-one bills introduced by the industrious gentleman from Florida. [Laughter.] If every one of us had been as efficient as he is, there ought to be 11,966 bills here now, and more coming at the rate of several hundred a day. How long would it take for this House to discuss all of the bills that I hold in my hand—a bill to increase the pay of the Cabinet officers to $25,000 a year, a bill covering almost every subject of American thought, American politics, from individual pensions up to immigration, and the subject of prohibition by Congress, and many others? And we are asked deliberately that 386 gentlemen shall have free and unlimited debate—that "free and unlimited" is a kind of an echo of the past [laughter]—upon every one of these questions.

Why, in the good old days—I had a memorandum here that I seem to have lost—but in the early Congresses of the United States—in the First, Second, Third, and Fourth Congresses—there were introduced into Congress only about eighty-odd and some hundred, and not over 200, bills to the Congress, and then there were about eighty Members of the House of Representatives. Now, we had twenty-odd thousand bills in the last Congress and over 16,000 bills in this Congress, and 386 able and eloquent gentlemen to proclaim to all the world their absolute knowledge of the details and propriety of every one of those measures.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD]?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the gentleman is not in favor of enlarged debate, is he not in favor of giving the House a chance to vote upon measures that are introduced here by gentlemen? For instance, the Massachusetts gentleman has introduced numerous measures here for repealing the duties on hides and giving us free hides. If we can not have debate, why may we not have a vote on some of those bills? Why are they not reported in here, either adversely or favorably?

Mr. DALZELL. May I answer the gentleman? We had an instance the other day of how free debate was cut off by a vote on a nonpartisan measure, when the entire Democratic party refused to allow debate.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield further?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa who asked the gentleman from Missouri a question. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. Are you in favor of free hides?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When the time comes I will indicate by my vote. [Great laughter.] I would like to have the gentleman state this: Six years ago I introduced a bill to repeal the duty on wood pulp and printing paper and typesetting machines. I have introduced it every Congress since. If that is a good bill, we ought to have an opportunity to vote on it, and if it is a bad bill, it ought to be reported adversely and let us vote upon it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has fallen exactly into my trap, if it was a trap, though I had not constructed it as a trap.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Then I am glad I am in it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then you would have 20,000 bills, because if you have a right to demand, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has the right to demand a vote on your bill, then any other Member would have the right to have his bill voted on, and there would be 20,000 bills that would have the right, with a roll call under the Constitution of the United States upon every bill, three times if the Democratic minority wanted to demand it. We would have but very little legislation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 22, 1906.

Hon. CHARLES H. GROSVENOR,
House of Representatives.

DEAR GENERAL: Approximately 20,000 bills will be introduced during this Congress. If a separate vote were taken on each bill ten thousand hours would be consumed in roll calls, as each roll call consumes thirty minutes. The legislative day consists of five hours. It would therefore require 2,000 legislative days in order to vote separately on each bill. If Congress should adopt the policy of permitting a separate roll call on each bill, the House would have to be in session twenty-seven hours and twenty-four minutes each day in the year, including Sundays, in order to do this.

Yours, very truly, W. A. RODENBERG.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Just one more question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have a subject I want to discuss.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Just one more question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, let us have it quickly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why, then, if these things may not be granted, can not the pitiful privilege be given me to move to suspend the rules, discharge the committee, and consider the bill in the House?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would really be glad if the gentleman could get it, and he would ascertain how quickly he would fail in his efforts.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like permission on that proposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not making recognitions.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. You are one of the three who control this House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has never offered a resolution on this bill, so far as I have heard.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will accommodate you before the week shall end.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will accommodate you by being in opposition to your proposition, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have a topic I want to speak about.

Mr. SIMS. It is on the topic you are talking about. I want to ask the gentleman only one question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Put it very short.

Mr. SIMS. It is short. I concede that you could not allow each Member in this House to consume the same time as a Senator would, but we could have the same number of hours in the House as the Senate does.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The House will have just as many hours of debate as the majority want.

Mr. SIMS. We are adjourning over two or three days at a time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I knew the gentleman to be pursued here not so very long ago, trying to get him to make a speech, because there was a surplus of time, and he being always ready to speak on anything his party is concerned in, they sent for him and begged him to make a speech, and he said he was not prepared to make a speech; and I did not believe that, for he is a most ready debater.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask the House, without taking it out of the time already allotted, to have five minutes to speak on a topic in this bill.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from New York will allow me to clip his wings for five minutes, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to speak, Mr. Chairman, upon a proposition in this bill to terminate the office of Lieutenant-General. I want to criticise, not in an unfriendly spirit, the language of the editorial from the Globe-Democrat, that the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, put into the RECORD yesterday. I was glad that the chairman of the committee did not indorse the proposition, and if I shall be allowed an opportunity to extend my remarks, I shall comment upon the particular language in the editorial which I criticise.

I think it is extremely unkind in a great newspaper to couple together four, five, or six of the men who have attained to great distinction in the Army of the United States, and, without pointing out any special reason for it, say that no one of them was entitled to the honor and distinction that was conferred upon him by his promotion. Upon that point I intend to elaborate a little. I do not intend now to specify every man and what he has done, but my opposition to this proposition in this bill is this: There is a gentleman, a member of the Army, a soldier of great distinction, of whom I have personal knowledge and personal acquaintance, who would now, at the very moment almost when he has reached the culmination of his career would be, as it were, rebuked by Congress by an amendment to the law preventing a promotion to the office of Lieutenant-General. But before I proceed to him, let us see whether there is anything along this line that distinguishes some of the other gentlemen. I do not speak of General Miles. He has passed out of the activity of his soldier life. He was most warmly applauded on this floor a year ago, and I would not strip from him a single laurel. He made a magnificent record in the civil war, and it is said—I know nothing about that—that his service in the Indian campaigns gave him great distinction.

But come now to Young, who succeeded him. He planted the American flag upon the Philippine Islands—that is, it was done under his direction after the great victory of Admiral Dewey, and his administration there was wise, discreet, and just, and he filled a long period of service with gallantry in the Army of the United States. He merited the promotion to Lieutenant-General in the fullest degree. This newspaper seems to go upon the idea that unless a man has served in the rank of a brigadier-general or a major-general in actual war he is not entitled to any consideration. Take General Chaffee. One of the most critical expeditions ever commanded by an American soldier under the American flag was commanded by Chaffee of Ohio [applause]—Chaffee of the volunteer service, Chaffee who never went to West Point, Chaffee who stepped upon the shores of China, and against the caution and precautions of the great soldiers of the European world, in answer to the suggestion that there might be danger, that there might be something happen and he had better not start, he said, in the language of a soldier, which made his utterance immortal, "I know nothing about that; I am ordered to go to Peking, and I am going." [Applause.] It was the language of good old Steedman, of Ohio, at the battle of Chickamauga, when his corps commander said to him, "General Steedman, I have no orders to go to the relief of Thomas on Snodgrass Hill." Steedman, looking his commanding officer in the face and using language that I will not use here, said, "General, you have the highest orders ever issued to a soldier—the sound of the enemy's guns." [Applause.]

Chaffee led his army to Peking and planted the American flag upon the walls of the Forbidden City. The conduct of his campaign, the management and handling of his troops, the thorough soldierly qualities he exhibited, challenged and received the approbation and commendation of the representatives of the armies of the civilized world, and Chaffee was promoted, and Chaffee deserved it, and Chaffee has been an honor to the flag and the uniform. [Applause.]

Now, Chaffee has served out his time, and there comes another general—Bates. I know less about his service than any of the rest, but I know he merits the distinction he has received. Now, I come to Corbin, a soldier of 1861, who entered the service in an Ohio regiment as a second lieutenant, and has been a soldier of the United States Army from that time to this, with a record as spotless—and I say it with full knowledge of everything that has been said about him, everything that has been done against him—as spotless as the ermine of a judge or the uniform of a soldier. He served all the way up——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets that the time is entirely under the control of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HULL. I can not yield time to the gentleman without cutting out other gentlemen entirely. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. HAY. I yield the gentleman five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I fully appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Virginia, and am glad that I do not have to take the time of my friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

At every step of the way Corbin has been a splendid soldier. He did not command an army in the field, but he commanded a regiment under my observation in one of the bloodiest battles of the war.

He served in a minor position of lieutenant. He served during the entire war, and reached the position of lieutenant-colonel. He entered the Regular Army, and in every position in the Regular Army from that of lieutenant he served his country with distinction, and honored the flag that waved over him. I know that slanders have been uttered about him. I know they are false. I know that the only attack ever made upon him which was official and formidable resulted in the unanimous verdict of a court-martial that not only said he was not guilty, but added "and do therefore most honorably acquit the said Henry C. Corbin." [Applause.]

After long and faithful service in Indian campaigns, he came to Washington and took high rank in the Adjutant-General's Department. He became the head of that department and was the Adjutant-General under the old organization. The war with Spain came and found the army with fifteen or twenty thousand men without arms, without ammunition, without proper organization, without military stores, medicine, and hospital supplies, ships or anything else, and yet the country and the world discovered at the end of fewer than a hundred days an army of 250,000 men in the field, fully equipped, fully organized, and William McKinley said to many men who are living that no man did for him as great service as did Henry C. Corbin. [Applause.] Again, over in the Philippine Islands, a gentleman whom I am not permitted to name, but who has high rank, said to me within a week that General Corbin was the best commander of the troops that the Philippine Islands ever had, for he understood how to command the Army and to aid the civil authority without irritation or trouble.

He coupled with the military administration, which was most intelligent and valuable, such a clear and distinct knowledge of civil organization and civil government as to bring the two branches, civil and military, into hearty accord, and did much to commend to the people of the Philippine Islands the respect and confidence they have in the justice and fairness of the United States Government. He has been indefatigable in his service over there. He has brought to the military organization the very best results, and is now on the ocean returning to his native land.

If this bill passes without amendment he now is to be cut off from a well-earned promotion. As he steps upon the soil of his country he is to find that the Congress of the United States meets him with the declaration that he shall not have the promotion that by operation of law he is entitled to have in the month of April. I will not consent that that measure shall be passed in an appropriation bill, if I am alive when the bill is read under the five-minute rule. [Applause.] Nor will I meet with any such proposition the gallant MacArthur, who is to succeed him and who is to have a short time as Lieutenant-General. I do not think that Congress ought now to pass this act in such a way as to take from these two men, already designated by the President, their just deserts, and thus pass a law for the future that shall have such an unpleasant effect on these two persons.

I am willing that the office of Lieutenant-General shall be abolished at the proper time. I am perfectly willing that the bill should be so amended as to abolish the office of Lieutenant-General at some future time, but I am not willing that it shall operate to rebuke these two gentlemen. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is framed on the very best lines of legislative action. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I am willing now to close up my time by yielding the remainder of it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has thirteen minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not arise, like my friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], to register a kick because the House concluded to celebrate Washington's Birthday by doing faithful service, instead of going out and loafing about the streets of Washington or for some other useless purpose to-day, but I rise for the purpose of reminding those gentle souls in the House who are so much disturbed for fear that the salaries will be cut off for a few ports in this country where the men are doing nothing that there is a day of judgment in such matters. [Laughter.]

I can well see from the debate which was had in the House yesterday why these gentlemen preferred to go around among the Members of the House, whispering in their ears, before attempting to get this bill up, that it was a bad bill, and that it would deprive the customs districts in the country of the faithful services of the patriots who were working there to earn their salaries—and some of the hardest work they do is to draw it from month to month. [Laughter.] I can well see how they preferred that line of argument rather than have the bill come before the Committee of the Whole House and discuss it and the reasons for it upon the floor.

I was surprised to read in the RECORD the reasons given by my genial friend from Massachusetts—whom I do not see in the House now, but who is almost the major-general of the forces—in opposition to this bill. If I read him correctly, he is in favor of retaining the custom-houses out of sentimental ideas. He says that these heads of the Department have no sentiment. Why, said he, there was Secretary Bonaparte recommended that the old ship Constitution should be destroyed instead of appropriating money to restore it, and he was working contrary to the whole sentiment of the country; and the gentleman from Massachusetts was fearful that the Secretary of the Treasury and the President might abolish some custom-house in the country where it did not pay anybody except the man holding the office, without any regard for the sentiment. I suppose he means that out of sentiment it is the duty of the United States to continue to support that man and his family at a comfortable salary, because it has been doing so, lo! for these hundred years. [Laughter.]

Then my friend from Maine reminds you of the great stretch of seacoast line in his State—some 800 miles. He did not tell you how many needy and worthy citizens there were in the State of Maine who were holding down their jobs because he had succeeded in temporarily delaying consideration of the bill. He did not propose to go into statistics on that matter. He told us of the glory and greatness of the port of Machias, in the State of Maine, and the great need of a customs service at that port. He went on to state how many vessels entered and cleared in the State of Maine, and that it was necessary to have a port there to enter and clear these vessels. He made the astonishing revelation that deputy collectors in subports were paid three or four dollars a day, and that that was more than the salaries of collectors of these ports in the State of Maine. As I understand the law the Secretary of the Treasury can fix the salary of a deputy collector at not exceeding $4 a day. There is a further provision in the law that he need not appoint any deputy collector in any subport of the country. He can now destroy these great subports that are so necessary to the existence of the life of the great State of Maine by withdrawing the salary and allowing them to go to work at some other honest business of making a livelihood. But that was not particularly what I arose to say, Mr. Chairman. The Secretary of the Treasury tells me that if this law is passed no Secretary of the Treasury would discontinue any port in the country without first giving notice and having a hearing to ascertain what reason there was for its existence, and he further tells me that if this bill was passed he would not seek to discontinue any port in the country where the receipts exceeded the expenditures. Now, I have already stated to the House I was willing to accept an amendment of that kind with this provision in it: That it should not apply to Port Townsend up here in Puget Sound, where vessels are required to go hundreds of miles out of the way in order to get to a port, being bound for the great cities of Seattle and Tacoma, simply because there is a sentiment about Port Townsend, and lo, these many years a collector has held down the job there, and the people of the United States have had to pay express on the money that was paid into the port at Port Townsend, first to Seattle and then to San Francisco, making a double expense for it. But I wanted to see what there was in this argument about the necessity of these ports for the purpose of clearance of vessels.

Now, you take the State of North Carolina. There is Albemarle, N. C., which is Elizabeth City. I said the other day something about that, and I have heard a wail from North Carolina that they needed a port somewhere in order to enter and clear vessels, and I went to the Secretary of the Treasury to try and find out how many vessels were entering and clearing in each one of these ports. At Albemarle, vessels entered, foreign, none; coastwise, none. Vessels cleared, foreign, none; coastwise, none. [Laughter.] Now, there ought to be a port there at Albemarle at an expense of $1,004, of course, to enter and clear this enormous commerce coming into that port; and they collected $5 of custom duties. It cost $1,000 at Port Albemarle to collect $5 and to enter and clear not a single vessel. Well, following a little further in North Carolina, at Beaufort, N. C., there was not a single vessel entered or cleared, and at this port they collected nothing and it cost $1,400.01. Why, gentlemen, will you not at least strike off that 1 cent and save that to the Treasury and only allow these men there the bare pittance of $1,400 for drawing their salary once a month out of the Treasury of the United States? Now, is it not ridiculous, the position these gentlemen are assuming in this House in regard to this bill? There is another port in North Carolina, Pamlico, N. C. (Newbern). There is some business going on there. Vessels entered, foreign, none; vessels cleared, foreign, none; coastwise, none. Vessels entered, coastwise, 11, at Newbern—that is, Pamlico, the name of the port. Turn to the other end of it; they collected $1,007 and it cost $6,190.08. Five gentlemanly employees of the Government are there to enter these 11 vessels and collect this $1,000 during the whole year, and it cost $5 to collect every dollar.

Ought it not to be within the power of the President of the United States, getting his information through the Secretary of the Treasury, to summon the collector of the great port of Pamlico and then have the dean of the North Carolina delegation (I do not see him here now) or the gentleman who represents that district come up here in force and show them why this port should be continued rather than to save this money to the taxpayers of the United States? Those are the three ports in North Carolina about which there is all this flittering around the House upon the other side when it is proposed simply to cut off this enormity. Then in the State of Maryland, at Annapolis, no vessels cleared, no vessels entered, but they collected $5 at Annapolis at a cost of $929.41. What excuse is there for the existence of that port at Annapolis? Is there any? Is there any reason why the Government of the United States should pay out this stipend to those two gentlemen who are holding down these offices a moment longer? Now, can you justify yourselves to your constituents, gentlemen, if you go home to them and tell them that there is a chance to save this to the people of the United States, this useless outlay of money, that you had the opportunity, and you had it not only once, but you are going to have it another time, to discuss this bill and consider this bill; dare you go home and face this record with your constituents when you come up for election next fall?

Mr. SIBLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY]?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would like to ask the distinguished leader, in as much as he has referred to the fact that we have got to go home and meet our constituents——

Mr. PAYNE. I will except the gentleman. I understand he has already met his and told them he would not run again.

Mr. SIBLEY. I feel perfectly free, and yet I have some sympathy with those who must go and answer that question. Therefore I am going to ask the gentleman if he believes it is the duty of Congress to surrender to the Executive the performance of those duties that, it seems to me, are incumbent upon the House of Representatives. More and more comes the question of centralization——

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman was to ask a question, and——

Mr. SIBLEY. Why does not the gentleman bring in his bill abolishing those ports which you created and let us vote whether we will abolish them, and not transfer the power of abolishing them to another department?

Mr. PAYNE. Now, if the gentleman is through with his question, I will answer.

Mr. SIBLEY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if I can get this bill before the House, my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] can offer just that amendment. It will be up to him to offer it, and it will be up to the House to say whether they will name ports and strike them out or not. The reason we did not do it (and I have spent a good deal of time in examining this question) was that we could not do it and do justice to all of these ports in any examination I could make. The Treasury Department can report to the President, and they must have the assent of the President before they abolish these ports.

The President has had that power under the internal-revenue system ever since it was created, to make, create, and maintain internal-revenue districts, to say where the collector should be and where the deputy collector should be, and there has not any great hardship resulted. There are some things that you can not go into details about in this great House of Representatives, with its 386 Members, and which you can safely leave to the Executive of the United States to do. But if the House thinks otherwise, let them vote to consider this bill, and then amend it, if you are not satisfied with it; strike out the ports that you think ought to be stricken out and leave the others that you think ought to be continued, but do not fear to meet this question and discuss this bill and amend it, and take a final vote upon its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to give these gentlemen an opportunity to correct their record, Mr. Chairman, and I ask unanimous consent that I may print a statement in the RECORD concerning all of these ports.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for permission to print a statement in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 21, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. PAYNE: In response to your verbal request of this morning I transmit herewith a statement of vessels entered and cleared at the ports named in the memorandum you left with me.

Very truly, yours,

L. M. SHAW.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will give me a minute, I will endeavor to answer it.

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JAMES. The other day, when the gentleman from New York was discussing this bill, he arraigned Paducah as a port where it took some $400 to collect nothing. I want to ask him if it is not true that Paducah is not a port of entry?

Mr. PAYNE. I never could find an excuse for the existence of Paducah on this list. No vessel was cleared, no vessel was entered, and, according to this list, nothing was collected. I do not know of any excuse for the existence of that port. That I will frankly state to the gentleman.

Mr. JAMES. But is it not true that Paducah is not a port of entry and never has been a port of entry——

Mr. PAYNE. Then it had better be abolished.

Mr. JAMES. But only a port of delivery?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has expired.

[Mr. JAMES addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] referred to the wonderful State of Maine. I do not on this occasion intend to enter any defense of my native State. He alluded to the great stretch of seacoast in my district, with its large amount of coastwise trade, to say nothing of the boundary lines from Canada that I had referred to in my address of yesterday in complimentary tone.

The information and knowledge of the gentleman from New York about these various ports in Maine is about equal to that which he possesses in reference to the port of Paducah, and what he knows about that has been shown by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. PAYNE. Why, the gentleman recognizes the fact that there is nothing at Paducah except the salaries.

Mr. POWERS. I do not recognize anything of that kind. The gentlemen from Kentucky show conclusively that the man stationed there rendered valuable services. The gentleman from New York made a statement in reference to one of the collectorships down in North Carolina, where there are five men holding down a salary and doing nothing, about the details, which I know nothing, and I don't think he does. The gentlemen from that State will take care of themselves. The gentleman from New York refers to the fact that there are five men in one collection district down there, collecting $5, with nothing to do but hold down their seats.

He says, "Don't you want to dispense with them?" The gentleman from New York knows, if he knows anything at all about this matter of collecting customs, that if there are five men down there—four of them in addition to the collector of the port—the Secretary of the Treasury believes it is necessary to have them there to take care of the best interests of the revenue, to prevent smuggling or something else, or they would not be there. If they are not needed there, the Secretary of the Treasury can discharge any or all of them to-day. Yet he attempts to frighten Members of this House by saying that we are in favor of graft, and asks that we have a chance to right ourselves when we go home to our constituents by voting to do away with this district, which the Secretary of the Treasury, by his action in allowing the collector four deputies, says needs this force. I think the gentleman will be cared for by his constituents, and I trust he will, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not think my constituents will ask me to right myself for having voted against a bill of this kind that has for its object the transferring of the power of this House to a Department or Bureau; but I think, on the contrary, they will be content with and approve the vote that I give, and I for one shall not be frightened by the gentleman's misleading statements into embracing the opportunity, which the gentleman says he shall generously offer the large majority of this House, to right themselves on the record.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to make one statement?

Mr. POWERS. I yield to the gentleman the rest of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the time limited for general debate by order of the House has now expired.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets that he has no authority to grant any extension of time.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I do not care to debate the matter.

Mr. HULL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14397) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, for leave to print the hearings and proceedings before our committee in regard to the Jamestown Exposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 23, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3899. An act granting authority to the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to dismiss midshipmen from the United States Naval Academy and regulating the procedure and punishment in trials for hazing at the said academy; and

S. 4482. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn."

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3899. An act granting authority to the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to dismiss midshipmen from the United States Naval Academy and regulating the procedure and punishment in trials for hazing at the said academy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 4482. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn."—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EXTENDING REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks of yesterday on the port bill in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of House bill No. 13296, and that the House proceed to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to suspend the rules at this time.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When will that motion be in order?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order on the first or third Monday, in the event that the condition of business at that time is such that the gentleman can be recognized.

RAILROAD DISCRIMINATIONS AND MONOPOLIES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution (No. 32) instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examinations into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies, and report on the same from time to time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to express the desire that nobody will object to the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution No. 32, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. R. 32), instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examinations into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies, and report on the same from time to time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the amendment to the Senate joint resolution, which is in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the joint resolution as follows: Strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed immediately to inquire, investigate, and report to Congress, or to the President when Congress is not in session, from time to time, as the investigation proceeds:

"First. Whether any common carriers by railroad, subject to the interstate-commerce act, or either of them, own or have any interest in, by means of stock ownership in other corporations or otherwise, any of the coal or oil which they or either of them, directly or through other companies which they control or in which they have an interest, carry over their or any of their lines as common carriers, or in any manner own, control, or have any interest in coal lands or properties or oil lands or properties.

"Second. Whether the officers of any of the carrier companies aforesaid, or any of them, or any person or persons charged with the duty of distributing cars or furnishing facilities to shippers, are interested, either directly or indirectly, by means of stock ownership or otherwise, in corporations or companies owning, operating, leasing, or otherwise interested in any coal mines, coal properties, or coal traffic, oil, oil properties, or oil traffic over the railroads with which they or any of them are connected or by which they or any of them are employed.

"Third. Whether there is any contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, in which any common carrier engaged in the transportation of coal or oil is interested, or to which it is a party; and whether any such common carrier monopolizes or attempts to monopolize or combines or conspires with any other carrier, company or companies, person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in coal or oil or traffic therein among the several States, or with foreign nations, and whether or not, and if so to what extent, such carriers, or any of them, limit or control, directly or indirectly, the output of coal mines or the price of coal and oil fields or the price of oil.

"Fourth. If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find that the facts, or any of them, set forth in the three paragraphs above do exist, then that it be further required to report as to the effect of such relationship, ownership, or interest in coal or coal properties and coal traffic, or oil, oil properties, or oil traffic aforesaid, or such contracts or combinations in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, or such monopoly or attempt to monopolize or combine or conspire as aforesaid, upon such person or persons as may be engaged independently of any other persons in mining coal or producing oil and shipping the same, or other products, who may desire to so engage, or upon the general public as consumers of such coal or oil.

"Fifth. That said Commission be also required to investigate and report the system of car supply and distribution in effect upon the several railway lines engaged in the transportation of coal or oil as aforesaid, and whether said systems are fair and equitable, and whether the same are carried out fairly and properly; and whether said carriers, or any of them, discriminate against shippers or parties wishing to become shippers over their several lines, either in the matter of distribution of cars or in furnishing facilities or instrumentalities connected with receiving, forwarding, or carrying coal or oil as aforesaid.

"Sixth. That said Commission be also required to report as to what remedy it can suggest to cure the evils above set forth, if they exist.

"Seventh. That said Commission be also required to report any facts or conclusions which it may think pertinent to the general inquiry above set forth.

"Eighth. That said Commission be required to make this investigation at its earliest possible convenience and to furnish the information above required from time to time and as soon as it can be done consistent with the performance of its public duty."

Amend the title so as to read:

"Joint resolution instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examinations into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies in coal and oil and report on the same from time to time."

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is the result of what is believed to be the conviction of a large portion of our public, as reflected by the Congress, that some of the great interstate carriers in the United States are, through various ways and means, inflicting what seems at least to be a wrong upon the American people. The committee is not always moved by the complaint of every individual who seeks to expose his woes to the public for its sympathy, but when complaints come in such a manner as complaints in this case have come it is felt that it is the duty of the Congress to examine the complaints and determine, first, whether they are well founded, and if so, whether they are violations of existing law, and, third, whether any new legislation on the part of Congress is necessary.

This resolution, as originally introduced into the House by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE], provided for the investigation of the methods of carriers of bituminous coal. The resolution introduced into the Senate of the United States by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] provided not only for the investigation in reference to bituminous coal, but as to all other products. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMP-BELL], who has been active in looking after the interests of his people, presented to the committee facts in support of his resolution which warrant the investigation as to oil. The committee felt that inasmuch as there were specific charges in reference to coal and oil it was the part of wisdom to extend the investigation to those products. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been intrusted with this duty, first, because the very nature of its duty places the information naturally within its grasp. It has been carrying on an investigation in reference to anthracite coal and is about to undertake the investigation as to oil. It is expected that this investigation will be prompt, speedy, and effectual.

It is not necessary that I should take the time of the House in recounting matters which Members already know. It is sufficient for me to say that the original old-fashioned notion which prevailed in this country since the time carriers were first instituted and up to a few years ago was that the interstate carrier was authorized, was chartered, to do a specific work, which was the work of a common carrier, and that meant carrying the goods of and for the people at reasonable prices on equal terms to all. Now it has been charged, and I think with authority, that there is, through intercorporate ownership of railroad stocks, a control which precludes fair treatment to the people in certain cases.

It has been disclosed, in fact, that many of the officers of the coal-carrying roads are officers of other carriers, and through them the product is taken from the mine to the market. It must necessarily stand as a fact that when carriers are so combined, and especially when you add to that fact that many of these carriers actually own the coal and the coal fields, as is alleged in this case or in the cases presented, that they will necessarily use discrimination, that thereby they will tend to monopoly, and those necessities of life—coal and oil—will be enhanced in their price to the consumers, who are thereby injured. It is also alleged on what seems to be good authority that where the roads themselves do not own the coal mines and the coal which they carry that their officers or men allied with them do control an interest in them. Now, I do not say that all of these alleged conditions are unlawful. I don't know whether they are or not. I know that certain States have passed laws prohibiting carriers from engaging as merchants. I contend that it is against public policy for any public carrier to become a dealer in the products which it hauls; but if it is not the law of the land, then certainly if the alleged conditions are found to exist this Congress should be placed in a position of knowledge in order that it may enact a law which will cure these defects, if defects they are found to be.

Mr. Speaker, without attempting to go into detail, but believing that this is a question which should be submitted to the Congress and by it to somebody with authority and ability to investigate, I am pleased to report that the committee has presented unanimously this resolution for the consideration of the House, which should pass unanimously.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the gentleman for a question, and then I shall reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know something a little more definite about the purpose and scope of this investigation. Is it the intention to clothe the Interstate Commerce Commission with authority to investigate the coal and oil industries as bearing upon the question of interstate transportation under the interstate-commerce law, or is the resolution broad enough to require an independent investigation of these industries to ascertain whether there be trusts and combinations under the antitrust statutes of the country? The question is, Is this investigation to be conducted as bearing upon the question of interstate transportation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it is. It was so thought by the committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So that the Interstate Commerce Commission is not to be authorized to go out and pursue an investigation purely for the purpose of ascertaining whether an unlawful trust or combination exists independent of the question of transportation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Independent of interstate carriers; no, sir.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, at the time the railroad rate bill was pending in the House I gave notice, first, that I would offer an amendment to that bill touching the subject-matter of the pending resolution, but later on, having been advised by the friends of the measure that it might encumber the measure, I gave notice further that I would introduce an independent bill on that subject. I rise now mainly to say that the scope of this resolution, the scope of this inquiry, is so complete touching the subject-matter of the proposition which I made that I feel it not only my duty to refrain from introducing that bill until this investigation shall have been had, but I desire also to give the reason for it, so that it might not be understood that I had in any wise slackened in my attitude to support an investigation of this character.

I believe that covered by this resolution are the greatest evils affecting the people of the United States in the matter of transportation in this country. And I believe that upon a report that lays bare the actual facts in those cases not one case, not ten cases, but hundreds of cases, Congress will be in a position to legislate intelligently. I am glad that the scope of this resolution is broad enough to give notice to certain gentlemen that the Congress of the United States is not so childish in its knowledge of men and passing affairs that the puerile statement of a great railroad man that his corporation does not own a controlling interest in certain other corporations—that is, does not own the majority of the stock of certain other corporations—is no answer to the proposition that there is that sort of a combination and community of interest and community of management that brings that corporation and those that it dominates directly under the very ban that this resolution seeks to avoid.

Therefore I most heartily support this resolution, and I hope that the Interstate Commerce Commission will show itself more efficient than I have ever believed it was in a prompt, energetic, intelligent, and complete investigation, and a report upon which Congress can act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield the gentleman from Mississippi five minutes. If the gentleman will permit, I had hoped that we might close this discussion at the end of the hour, as we have other matters here. I was going to ask—this, of course, does not apply to the gentleman from Mississippi—that at the end of the hour gentlemen who desire to print on this subject may have permission to do so. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, "the gentleman from Mississippi" never prints. I rise merely for the purpose of saying without argument at all that what I have heard from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] convinces me that I and all of this side of the House, at any rate, ought to support the resolution which is offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I think that we ought never to miss an opportunity to shed the light of publicity upon these corrupt details of corporate life, and if I had needed any argument at all to convince me that I was right I would have received it a moment ago from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I address the House at this time only because the acts out of which this resolution grew have occurred principally in the State of West Virginia. In April, 1904, I introduced into this House, just before the close of that session and shortly after the community of interest which has been complained of had been established by these railroads, a resolution asking for an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Committee of that arrangement. Very shortly thereafter the Interstate Commerce Commission investigated that arrangement and reported fully to the country the nature of that interest and control. The condition which has been complained of is one that has occurred in the development of railroad building in this country. Formerly the railroads when they combined did it for the purpose of increasing the profits of the railroads by promoting the movement of traffic. The community of interest which is complained of now—the arrangement which is objected to now, if it exists, and we all believe it does—is a limitation upon the free competition in the sale of coal and coke in this country, and is brought about by arrangement similar in nature but different in purpose. The real trouble is this, that the railroads have combined not for the purpose of promoting the movement of traffic, and in that way increasing the revenues and the business of the roads, but for the purpose of preventing the movement of traffic on the part of the smaller of the two companies combining. For instance, it is charged and believed that one of the great railroad companies of the country, engaged in the transportation of coal, has procured the control of the competing coal roads in West Virginia, to wit, the Chesapeake and Ohio, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Norfolk and Western, not for the purpose of promoting the exchange of traffic among all those companies, but for the purpose of preventing the three controlled roads from carrying the amount of coal to market that they would if it were not for this arrangement.

So that the real question which is to be reached by this investigation is this one: Whether common carriers engaged in a public service can make an arrangement by which one public agency may control another, not for the purpose of promoting the public service and increasing by legitimate means the revenues of the agencies in the combination, but so that the controlling road may not suffer by competition at the hands of the corporation which is under control.

However, Mr. Speaker, it ought to be known everywhere that no investigation will bring relief of itself, and that no laws which we can pass here will be self-executing any more than the laws already in existence. It has recently been said in the public prints that the State of West Virginia has no adequate laws upon this subject. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that the laws of the State of West Virginia are as advanced and as ample to give relief in this matter as the laws of any other State of this Union.

In 1895 the legislature of West Virginia enacted these provisions:

RAILROAD COMPANIES PROHIBITED FROM BUYING AND SELLING COAL OR COKE, AND DISCRIMINATING.

[This is chapter 16, acts 1895, the title of which is "An act to prevent railroad companies from buying and selling coal or coke, and to prevent discriminating."]

SEC. 80. It shall be unlawful for any railroad corporation to engage, directly or indirectly, in the business of buying and selling coal or coke, or to promise, pledge, or lend its credit, money, or other property or thing of value to another, either natural or corporate, engaged in such business; but nothing herein shall prevent such corporation from purchasing such articles for its own consumption, or when it is the owner of any such commodities from selling and shipping the same: Provided, In doing so such corporation shall not discriminate in rates, distribution of cars, or otherwise against other shippers of like commodities on its line: And provided further, That when such company has the right to sell either of such commodities, and is unable from any cause to fill any bona fide contracts it may have made to supply such commodities, or either of them, it may purchase them to enable it to fill such contracts. (1895 Acts, 16: 1.)

SEC. 81. Every railroad corporation along whose line of railroad the industries of mining coal or manufacturing coke is carried on shall, without discrimination between or amongst shippers and without unnecessary delay, make a reasonable provision for the transportation of all such coal and coke offered for transportation over its railroad, and no such railroad corporation shall discriminate in rates, distribution of cars, or otherwise against or among shippers of coal or coke offered for shipment on its line or lines. (1895 Acts, 16: 2.)

SEC. 86. Such corporation, company, public carrier, or individual shall make reasonable provisions for transportation of all freight that may be offered it for shipment, and transport the same without unreasonable delay; and shall not discriminate against or among persons offering freight for shipment over such railroad in rates, distribution, or allotment of cars, or otherwise under substantially similar circumstances and conditions; and shall not give or allow to any shipper or consignee of freight any rebate or drawback so as to give such shipper or consignee any advantage over any other shipper or consignee. The compensation for the transportation of goods and merchandise, and all kinds of property hereinbefore described, shall be interpreted to include all fees and commissions charged by any such corporation, company, public carrier, or individual, their agent or agents, for manifesting, receiving, handling, shipping, and delivering any goods, merchandise, and all other kinds of property for transportation on said railroads, so that the entire charge made by such corporation, company, public carrier, or individual shall not exceed the regular transportation fees herein prescribed, except for the storage of any articles in any depot or warehouse of such corporation, company, public carrier, or individual, or in any depot or warehouse by their agent or agents, which remain in such depot or warehouse after the lapse of twenty-four hours from the time the consignee is notified by the agent or the other employees of such corporation, company, public carrier, or any individual of their arrival, in case where the abode of the consignee is known to said agents. (1895 Acts, 17, 3.)

As far back as 1872 the following provisions had been enacted in West Virginia:

SHALL TRANSPORT PASSENGERS AND FREIGHT WHEN OFFERED.

SEC. 97. All railroad corporations whose lines of road shall extend into or through this State and which extensions are incorporated by the laws of this State or any other State, or the United States, shall take and transport passengers and freight when offered: Provided, That such railroad corporation shall not be permitted to charge for the transportation of freight and passengers, or either, a less sum from one terminus of their road to the other, than from an intermediate station to either terminus thereof, nor a greater sum for the transportation of freight and passengers, or either, from any intermediate station to either terminus of the road, or from either terminus to an intermediate station, or from one intermediate station to another, than from any intermediate station to either terminus or from either terminus to any intermediate station, or from one intermediate station to another, where the distance is less. (1872–3 Acts, 227: 9.)

WILLFUL VIOLATION DEEMED A FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISES.

SEC. 103. Any willful violation of the provisions of this act, on the part of any railroad corporation, shall be deemed and taken as a forfeiture of its franchises, and such corporation so offending shall be proceeded against by the prosecuting attorney in any county through or into which its road may run, by scire facias, or upon information in the nature of a quo warranto, to judgment of ouster and final execution. In any prosecution or proceeding under this section, if the violation complained of be proved, it shall be presumed to have been willful until the contrary thereof be proved. (1872–3 Acts, 227: 15; amended 1877 Acts, 117.)

And there are other provisions of the statutes of West Virginia which go to show that the State of West Virginia has not only made provisions as to furnishing facilities and to prevent discriminations in rates and in other railroad service among the carriers, but there is law in the State of West Virginia now which will enable private persons at their own private suit and litigation to secure relief in these matters.

I am very much in favor of the resolution, Mr. Speaker. I participated in its favorable report by the committee. But the devices are already known out of which arise this discrimination and this monopoly, in part, of the coal and coke traffic of the country, and the warning may well be sounded that even after the Interstate Commerce Commission has made this investigation it will be up to the persons in interest to prepare their own cases and bring about their own relief through the courts. The habit of waiting upon Government and legislative bodies for the passage of some new law to give relief rather than to go into the courts of the country vigorously to insist upon rights already to be had under existing law is one of the chief causes why so many wrongs remain unrighted in this country to-day.

I am glad to see this resolution pass, but I should be sorry if it should lull persons in interest into a sense of security so that they will imagine that by waiting, and thereby lessening their own efforts to take care of themselves, some relief is going to come to them by the action of Congress, unaided by their own energy and effort. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee from which this bill was reported, and also of the subcommittee which reduced the various original resolutions into the form reported and now pending, I wish to say that we thought the original Senate resolution was entirely too diffuse and broad in the number of subjects of investigation authorized, in the multiplicity of which we feared it might be construed that, so many things being suggested, it was not specifically required that much attention be given to any. So we reduced the scope of the original Senate resolution to the one subject of coal and made it to cover, as the country knows, all coal, and not alone one kind. Then upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] oil was added to coal. Doubtless we would have thought of oil, and we had heard of oil, and the monstrous outrages committed in connection with oil, oil properties, and transportation, but it is to the credit of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that it was pressed upon the committee and placed in this resolution, authorizing the investigation as to coal and oil. The report of the subcommittee was unanimous and was adopted with entire unanimity by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I trust that it will pass by the unanimous vote of this House.

I will ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who expects to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE] five minutes, that he permit me in addition thereto to yield to the gentleman from Texas the balance of my time unconsumed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GILLESPIE].

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I think the whole country is to be congratulated upon the quick response of this House and of the other branch of the Congress to this demand of honest, intelligent, and patriotic American citizens for an investigation into the conditions that are making them commercial slaves.

Why, Mr. Speaker, if half of what I hear is true in the coal regions of the United States, there is a system of commercial brigandage and desperadoism prevailing in those regions due to the "captain" of industry compared to whom the physical desperado of the pioneer days of this country is a gentleman of the first class. [Laughter and applause.] I do not know whether they are true or not, but I do know this—there is a sentiment fast gathering in this country, in all parts of it, that is going to demand of the National Government and the State governments enforcement of the laws we already have on our statute books, and putting such there as commercial independence demands. [Applause.] It is not a partisan question. I have received letters from men, numberless, telling me, "I have been a Republican all my life and expect to continue to be, but these conditions are not due to the principles, teachings, and policies of the Republican party." I do hope that this nonpartisan condition will continue and that the trust question will not become a party question. The cunning of greed has the upper hand. It is un-American, and all Democrats and Republicans the country over should stand united and swear by the eternals that the laws of this country shall be enforced. Our country is free of foreign domination; we have freed it of superstition; now let's free it of human greed. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fourteen minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I hope the gentleman will yield sufficient of that time to answer an inquiry with reference to the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, out in Iowa, in the district which I have the honor to represent, we have this condition of things. That is the heart of the coal regions of Iowa. Some of the railroads at a distance have built lateral lines to the coal fields. Corporations have been organized, and the stock of those corporations is owned by the railway company. They have done this in order to make themselves independent in obtaining fuel for the operation of their roads, and are not using the lines nor their coal fields for the purpose of competing or interfering with other coal miners. I ask the gentleman if in his opinion this resolution is intended to attack this method of the railroad companies to secure coal for their own use?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In answer to the gentleman from Iowa, I will say that the resolution is intended to place before Congress full information as to the conditions which may exist, and showing the relations between interstate carriers of the country and the coal and oil companies of the country. I do not imagine that the case which the gentleman states is one that would require action upon the part of the Congress. It is the object to reach those corporations which are carrying on business in restraint of trade and which descriminate against the people of the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if when he answered the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that the contemplated investigation had nothing to do with the antitrust act, whether he had before him subdivisions three and four of this resolution, because it seems to me that the inquiry contemplated within the third and fourth subdivisions of this resolution absolutely cover the kind of conspiracies embraced in the antitrust act, and it covers other things than those which the proper function of the Interstate Commerce Commission is supposed to embrace. It seems to me that the investigation of whether or not there is a combination in restraint of trade in favor of trusts or otherwise is a little beyond the function of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has already attached to it duties which reach the limit of its proper functions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will simply repeat to the gentleman what I said to the gentleman from Indiana, that this resolution does not go into the coal and oil business, except as it enters into interstate commerce. That is all.

Mr. MAHON. Let me ask the gentleman a question, not in criticism of the resolution. How are you going to investigate the oil business?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not knowing very well myself, I thought it wise to submit that matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MAHON. They can not under this resolution in the form that it is now presented. The main quantity of oil coming from the fields of Kansas and Texas are shipped over pipe lines, and a very small proportion of it goes over the railroad as refined oil. Now, pray tell me, how is our friend from Texas going to get any relief from this resolution on oil transported from a private oil field from the State of Texas, who will be compelled to sell their oil at a reduced price when they have it shipped? You do not mention pipe lines in your resolution at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We did not attempt to do anything, I will say to the gentleman, except as to railroad carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and for other evils that exist we will have to secure some other form of relief.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that this resolution is only directed to the business of the common carriers—the railroad companies.

Mr. MAHON. The pipe line is a common carrier.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia (continuing). That is doing business in the interstate commerce of the country.

Mr. MAHON. The pipe lines are engaged in doing interstate business.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It is impossible for a pipe line to separate one man's stuff from another; it goes in bulk.

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. One lot of oil must push another lot ahead of it and there is no possibility of distinguishing one portion of the oil or one portion of the gas from another. This resolution looks, and I think it looks only, to the transportation of the refined product from the refineries to the consumers, and that is a very important branch of the railroad companies' business.

Mr. MAHON. It has been held that these pipe-line companies are transportation companies, and that they come under the interstate-commerce act; and they have robbed the private operators in the oil fields of Kansas and Texas, compelling them to sell their oil at a less price than they were entitled to receive for it. Now, if you are going to investigate the oil business you must take in the pipe lines, because the railroad companies do very little of the transportation of the oil.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the gentleman to read the principle set forth in the title to this joint resolution, which says:

Joint resolution instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examination into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies in coal and oil, and report on the same from time to time.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; but you have amended the bill to investigate the oil business, and the oil business is transacted through the pipe lines. Why not amend your bill so as to put in the pipe lines? The resolution in its present form does not apply to the transportation of crude oil at all. They can crush all the private operators in the country as they please.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent that Members may have five legislative days in which to print remarks on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that Members may have unanimous consent to print remarks on this joint resolution for five legislative days. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he intends this to close the debate. I should like two or three minutes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I had intended to close, but I will gladly yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I make no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. No objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while I am in favor of the resolution, being a member of the committee which reported it, I think it is proper and fair to the House to call attention to one matter in the resolution which Members may wish to know hereafter. The proposition in this resolution is, among other things, to have the Interstate Commerce Commission make an investigation as to whether the railroad companies have violated any of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law, so far as their operations are concerned with the dealing in coal or oil. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the Sherman anti-trust law applies to the railroad companies. We have provided by law that in any investigation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission it may require any person to appear before that body and testify, and that no one can claim immunity from giving testimony on the ground that the testimony may render him liable to prosecution or tend to incriminate him.

We give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to compel any railroad official or other person in the country who may have knowledge upon any of these questions to appear before the Commission and to testify under oath; but we provide by the law that the person having testified can not be subjected to prosecution in relation to any of the matters concerning which he has testified; not limiting that to the use of his testimony in the case, but exempting him from prosecution. So that in this resolution we direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to call before it for investigation the officials of every railroad in the United States that may be charged to be in a combination contrary to the Sherman antitrust law, and then we exempt them from prosecution. We might as well say in the resolution or in law that if they have violated the Sherman antitrust law we exempt them from prosecution hereafter, and so far as they are concerned we repeal the Sherman antitrust law as applied to railroads dealing in coal or oil properties by reason of the passage of this resolution.

While it does not seem to me at this time under the circumstances advisable to oppose this resolution, forced into action by the position of the committee and the country and the House, it does seem to me that the House ought to know that in passing a resolution of this sort they are exempting from prosecution the men whom we are seeking to prosecute. The result of our action is that whereas now they are subject to prosecution, by direction of the Attorney-General of the United States, when this investigation ends they will be exempt from prosecution, and when we seek to punish them we exempt them from punishment.

Mr. WANGER. Will my friend permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WANGER. The gentleman's remarks are based on the supposition that the Interstate Commerce Commission will examine the persons who have offended against the antitrust law?

Mr. MANN. My proposition is based upon the supposition that in making an examination of this matter they must call the officials of the railroads before them, and having called the officials of the railroads before them those officials can not be prosecuted. I do not know how else they will get the information.

Mr. WANGER. But if they can get the information without calling any of these gentlemen there will be no immunity.

Mr. MANN. There is no immunity unless they are called.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think the resolution gives the Interstate Commerce Commission all the power necessary to carry out what is required of them in the resolution?

Mr. MANN. I think the Interstate Commerce Commission now under existing law has all the power that can be conferred upon them by any act of Congress to make the investigation. This resolution simply requires them to do that which they have the power to do now under the existing law.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. It seems to me that this resolution embraces within it subjects that the Interstate Commerce Commission was not heretofore charged with. They are required to do something here that they did not have the power to do before. If that is the case, would it not be necessary in this resolution to stipulate that they should have further power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and documents in order to make the investigation which the Commission is charged with and which they were not authorized to make heretofore?

Mr. MANN. They have the power under the law to make such investigation as they please concerning the carrying on of business by any railroad under the operation of law, and that is all that this resolution does.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. All that the gentleman from Iowa requires.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution does not affect the law in respect to which the gentleman from Illinois has spoken at all. He is right in saying that the Commission has the power now to institute this investigation, and if they were to do it upon their own motion, witnesses that might be called would, under the operation of the law, have the immunity of which he speaks. So that there is no change of any character effected by this legislation.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Iowa did not understand me to say that I thought there was any change.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did understand the purpose of the gentleman's argument was against this proposition because of that supposed immunity that would result.

Mr. MANN. I was not even arguing against the resolution, if the gentleman will pardon me. I was simply calling the attention of the House to the situation so that Members might understand it, because that situation will arise hereafter.

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no question about that; that question will probably come up, but there is no change effected by this resolution. Whatever immunity gentlemen would have, if the examination was voluntary upon the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it would be precisely the same under this act where it becomes compulsory.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is no law now, as I understand, which will compel a man to testify if he pleads that it would incriminate himself. This does not change the law in any particular.

Mr. MANN. This does not change the law, but the law does now compel a man to testify before the Interstate Commerce Commission notwithstanding he may plead that his testimony might incriminate him. He must testify, but he can not be prosecuted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on the resolution and the amendment to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the preamble.

The amendment to the preamble was considered, and agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was passed.

The title was amended.

PENSION DAY.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, under the rule bills on the Private Calendar are in order to-day. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow be substituted for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that to-morrow be substituted for to-day for the consideration of pension bills upon the Private Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAMS AND POWER STATIONS AT MUSCLE SHOALS, ALABAMA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (H. R. 297) to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, which, by concurrent resolution of the Senate and the House, was sent by the President of the United States back to this House for the purpose of amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the Muscle Shoals bill returned by the President to the House be taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the committee authorized the reporting of the bill (H. R. 14970) to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, with a view to passing it under suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote. Now, the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] does not seem to contemplate that. I think he will agree with me that it has been the understanding this measure should be brought up under suspension of the rules under the same conditions as would have existed had it been brought up on Monday.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That is the agreement, Mr. Speaker, made between the gentleman from Ohio and myself.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I desire that to be clearly understood.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] modifies his request for unanimous consent that the bill referred to upon the Speaker's table may be considered as upon a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. PAYNE. And pass the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be correctly informed in regard to this. A new bill as a substitute for the old bill has been introduced here, being the bill H. R. 14970. Is that the bill that we are to consider?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the request is to consider the bill that was returned by the President of the United States to the House and which is upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am authorized by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, by a unanimous vote, to call this up at any parliamentary stage under any circumstances that I can. That is the authority given me by that committee.

The SPEAKER. This is a proceeding by unanimous consent under which, if the Chair understands the request of the gentleman, if unanimous consent is given, the bill upon the Speaker's table returned from the President shall be considered now upon a motion to suspend the rules and dispose of the same.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That is correct, and it was my great anxiety to have a hearing on this bill which induced me to make that agreement, and which agreement I intend to abide by. It was made in good faith.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Under that consent, would the passage of the substitute bill be under suspension of the rules, requiring a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. There is no substitute bill, as the Chair understands it.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, an amended bill; whatever it may be.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an enrolled bill that came from the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman, for greater certainty, submit to the Chair just what action he desires the House to take?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read just the proposition that I desire to submit.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill H. R. 297—"An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama"—be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the following amendments be made:

Amend section 1 of the enrolled bill by striking out, after the word "elect," at the end of line 5, section 1, page 1, the following: "between the mouth of Malletts Creek on the east, and," in line 6 of said section and insert in lieu thereof "and the Secretary of War may approve between a point on the southern side of the river opposite to or below the head or opening of the canal constructed by the United States on the north side of the river, on the east, and." Insert after the word "river," in line 10 of said section 1, page 1, the following: "between the two points above mentioned."

Amend by adding, after the word "war," in line 13, of said section 1, page 1, of said enrolled bill, the following: "for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States;" so that said section 1 of the enrolled bill when amended will read as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any person, company, or corporation having authority therefor under the laws of the State of Alabama may hereafter erect, maintain, and use a dam or dams in or across the Tennessee River, in the State of Alabama, at such points at Muscle Shoals as they may elect, and the Secretary of War may approve, between a point on the southern side of the river opposite to or below the head or opening of the canal constructed by the United States on the north side of the river, on the east, and the western line of section 16, township 3, range 10, on the west, for the purpose of erecting, operating, and maintaining power station and to maintain inlet and outlet races or canals and to make such other improvements on the southern bank of the Tennessee River, between the two points above mentioned, as may be necessary for the development of water power and the transmission of the same, subject always to the provisions and requirements of this act and to such conditions and stipulations as may be imposed by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War for the protection of navigation and the property and other interests of the United States."

Amend section 2, page 1, of said enrolled bill, by striking out after the word "canal," in line 25, page 1, of said section, all down to and including the word "river," in line 25 of said section 2.

Amend said section 2, page 1, of the enrolled bill, by striking out after the word "canal," in line 28, page 1, all down to and including the word "river," in line 29 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "or the Tennessee River;" so that said section 2 of the enrolled bill as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That detailed plans for the construction and operation of a dam or dams and other appurtenant and necessary works shall be submitted by the person, company, or corporation desiring to construct the same to the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, with a map showing the location of such dam or other structures with such topographical and hydrographic data as may be necessary for a satisfactory understanding of the same, which must be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before work can be commenced on said dam or dams or other structures; and after such approval of said plans, no deviation whatsoever therefrom shall be made without first obtaining the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War: Provided, That the constructions hereby authorized do not interfere with the navigation of Muscle Shoals Canal or the navigation of the Tennessee River: And provided further, That said dam or dams and works shall be limited only to the use of the surplus water of the river not required for the navigation of the Muscle Shoals Canal or the Tennessee River, and that no structures shall be built and no operations conducted by those availing themselves of the provisions of this act which shall injure or interfere with the navigation of the Muscle Shoals Canal or impair the usefulness of any improvement made by the Government in the interest of navigation."

Amend section 3, page 2, of said enrolled bill, by striking out all after the word "otherwise," in line 17, of said section 3, page 2, down to and including the word "damage" at the end of line 18 of said section and page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in a court of competent jurisdiction;" so that said section 3 of said enrolled bill after being so amended will read:

"SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States reserves the right, at any time that the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee River demands it, to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam or other works built under the provisions of this act, suitable lock or locks or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control such dam or dams or other structures, and the level of the pool caused by such dam or dams, to such an extent as may be necessary to provide facilities for navigation; and whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of such lock or other structures, the person, company, or corporation owning and controlling such dam or dams or other structures shall convey to the United States, under such terms as Congress shall prescribe, titles to such land as may be required for the use of such lock and approaches, and in addition thereto shall grant to the United States, free of cost, the free use of water power for building and operating such constructions: Provided also, That the person, company, or corporation building, maintaining, or operating any dam or dams or other structures under the provisions of this act shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise, in a court of competent jurisdiction. The person, company, or corporation owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Now, the request of the gentleman, as the Chair understands it, is for unanimous consent at this time to move to suspend the rules and pass the concurrent resolution in all respects, except as to time, the same as making the motion under Rule XXVIII of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And pass the amendment just read by the Clerk to the enrolled bill. The Chair has the enrolled bill there.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that all of that is included in the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

The SPEAKER. If the concurrent resolution is agreed to, then there is no further action necessary to be taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] introduced, on February 15, a new bill containing all the changes proposed by the concurrent resolution in the former bill, and it seems to me that instead of the House passing a concurrent resolution directing the enrolling clerks to make a lot of amendments in the bill different from the way the bill passed the House it would be better practice for the House to pass the new bill, and I think that ought to be satisfactory to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], and I undersand that is satisfactory to the opposition. I suggest to the gentleman that he modify his request to ask leave to suspend the rules for the purpose of putting the bill H. R. 14970 upon its passage.

Mr. PAYNE. Not to put it upon its passage, but to pass it.

Mr. MANN. Well, to pass the bill. That does away with any question about changing the record and permitting the enrolling clerk to make changes in something which do not accord with the facts, and it accomplishes the same results.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No, indeed, it does not, if the gentleman will think for a moment. I am not staking absolutely everything upon the passing of the resolution just read. I will be required to get a two-thirds vote on the resolution. I do not understand that curtailed any of my rights or forfeited any of them in connection with this resolution by introducing the bill to which the gentleman alluded.

Mr. MANN. I am saying to the gentleman a failure to suspend the rules and pass House bill 14970, if put to a vote, would not affect in any way whatever the right to have this bill reported out of the committee and considered in the usual method in the House on call of committees, so the gentleman does not lose any of his rights.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I admit that is true. The Interstate Commerce Committee has unanimously adopted that bill, but this bill (297), Mr. Speaker, went to the President and there—I do not violate any of the parliamentary rules by saying it—was for four or five days discussed before the President by different gentlemen, and these amendments offered and contained in the resolution come from the highest authority of our Government in control of matters of this nature, and my purpose was to stand by what they had laid down for me.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to object to what the gentleman asked, but I think the House is indulging in a very dangerous practice if it starts to direct the enrolling clerks to change the record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois is right in favoring the consideration of the bill H. R. 14970. Such procedure as is suggested by the gentleman from Alabama would be very novel, and it would be very confusing to discuss this resolution, and I shall feel compelled to object to it. I will not object if there is a motion to suspend the rules for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14970.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill on the Calendar?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That bill is on the Calendar. I think the gentleman from Alabama will realize that he loses no possible right by the substitution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Our agreement relates to the bill H. R. 297, on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But this bill (14970) has been brought into the House embodying all the proposed amendments and is perfectly clear, while the resolution sets forth a number of amendments which necessarily will confuse the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to say now that he will make an objection to the bill No. 297 being taken from the Speaker's table, which was sent back from the President of the United States?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would say this——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That was your agreement with me.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I did feel like objecting a moment ago. Our original understanding was that this resolution should be brought up, and with a view to absolute observance of the letter of our understanding I will not object if the gentleman from Alabama insists, but I am satisfied it will prove confusing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DALZELL. I have no objection at all to this bill or objection to its consideration at this time, but do I understand the Speaker holds there can be a suspension of the rules on anything except on the first and third Mondays of the month?

The SPEAKER. By no manner of means. This is a request for unanimous consent to move to suspend the rules at this time, to suspend them otherwise than under the conditions of Rule XXVIII, and the Chair thinks that the House may waive the question as to the time when the motion may be made. The House may do almost anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. DALZELL. If the Speaker will bear with me for a moment, that is true unless there be something in the rules to the contrary, but this rule says:

> Nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month.

Now, it seems to me the request for unanimous consent is against that, and it seems to me it would be a very bad precedent.

I do not wish to be misunderstood with respect to the merits of the bill. I am not talking about that now. I am talking about the question of the rules; and it seems to me that it was the intention of the rule to place a limitation upon the power of the House by placing a limitation on the power of the Speaker. It says that he shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules. It is very much like the case of the rule that prohibits the Speaker from entertaining a motion to permit parties not permitted by the rule to come upon the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. But that rule, the gentleman will recollect, prohibits the Speaker from submitting a request for unanimous consent. This rule does not. The Chair could not and would not entertain a motion on any except the two Mondays specified, but this comes by a request for unanimous consent that the Speaker shall entertain a motion to suspend the rules under the terms of Rule XXVIII. It seems to the Chair that the House may under the rule, if it sees proper to do so, give unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I thought, Mr. Speaker, the House by unanimous consent could do anything.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has just so stated. However, not anything, because there is a rule, for instance, in the Manual that prohibits the Speaker from even submitting a request for unanimous consent, but that is not this rule.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] if he is willing this should go under the rule for twenty minutes' debate on a side?

The SPEAKER. It would go if a request is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not think the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] would enforce that rule on me, because I want time to explain this bill to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest that the gentleman couple with his request, if he can, a request as to an agreement on the time for debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. We are going to do that.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not do it with this request?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent that we be allowed an hour and twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman also couples with his request that, after a second is ordered, there shall be an hour and twenty minutes in lieu of the forty minutes' debate.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. An hour and twenty minutes in all. That is forty minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the form in which this comes up I desire a distinct understanding, and I hope the Speaker will restate the proposition. It seems to me that it is a very peculiar situation. We are passing a resolution embodying numerous amendments not reported upon by any committee of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That is a mistake, Mr. Speaker. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee have reported unanimously in favor of the amendments proposed and just read to the enrolled bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman——

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. But embodied in a bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] declines to request that that bill be allowed to come up. Now, I think it would be better to object, but I feel like standing by the letter of my agreement, no matter how prejudicial it may be, although it was made under an entire misunderstanding. Now, this is the point which I think the House should clearly understand. It requires a two-thirds vote to pass this motion in any event. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The first question before the House, as I take it, under this request for unanimous consent, is, Shall the rules be suspended and the resolution amending the bill pass?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I did not hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The question which will first arise before the House will be, Shall the rules be suspended and the resolution amending this bill (H. R. 297) be passed? That will require a two-thirds vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the request for unanimous consent the question will be in all respects as to subsequent proceedings in considering the concurrent resolution, to consider it under Rule XXVIII, as stated by the Chair. And the Chair will further state that a second would have to be made, unless waived, if demanded. He will further state that if unanimous consent is given, instead of the debate being forty minutes it will be an hour and twenty minutes; and at the expiration of that time the vote will be upon suspending the rules and agreeing to the concurrent resolution, which will require a two-thirds vote, a quorum being present.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Another parliamentary inquiry. What is this concurrent resolution that is pending?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No. 10.

Mr. BURTON. Is it the one recalling the bill from the Executive Mansion?

The SPEAKER. This concurrent resolution is the one the gentleman sends to the Clerk's desk now; and it has been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama moves to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I demand a second.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to forty minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio to forty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not in words or in effect contravene the usually accepted principle and theory of this Government, that wherever and whenever the Government of the United States has expended any moneys, in large or small amounts, in the establishment or creation of works or structures on navigable streams, which establishment of works incidentally creates water power, that no man or corporation shall be licensed to utilize and enjoy that privilege—that power created by the Government, at the expense of public money—unless they pay for it. I say this bill in no manner contravenes that usually accepted principle; but, on the contrary, it goes upon the theory, and the facts sustain it, and that is all I wish the Members of this House to listen to. It goes upon the theory and the principle that where the Government on a navigable river has not spent one dollar that creates an ounce of power that the Government ought not to charge the citizen or the corporation for enjoying any privileges that may be there created by nature. In other words, the theory of this bill is that if the Government has created valuable water powers by the expenditure of public moneys, then these valuable powers ought not to be given free to anyone. That is the position I take, and I want to lay the facts of this bill before the Members of this House. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I desire to read——

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly; with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. KEIFER. We have before us the bill H. R. 14970, which seems to have been introduced on February 5, 1906. Is that the bill you are proposing to pass?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No; that is not the bill we are proposing to pass. That bill contains exactly the provisions and conditions that the enrolled bill will contain if amended as we now suggest.

Mr. KEIFER. Then, in effect, it will be this bill and language like it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The language is exactly the same, as correctly stated by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio; and my purpose in introducing that bill was, as you see, to have something additional to hold to.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to read to the House what I understand to be the universally accepted doctrine, which is promulgated by the Chief Engineer, General Mackenzie, in comments made on April 4, 1905, in connection with legislation of this kind. It correctly and fully states what rights the Government has in the navigable streams of the country, and how those rights can be exercised and enjoyed. I read:

> 3. In connection with legislation of this kind careful consideration should be given to the question of the limitations of the power of the Federal Government over navigable waters. By virtue of its power to regulate commerce, Congress may exercise control over the navigable waters of the United States, but only to the extent necessary to protect, preserve, and improve free navigation. The Federal Government has no possessory title to the water flowing in navigable streams, nor to the land comprising their beds and shores, and hence Congress can grant no absolute authority to anyone to use and occupy such water and land for manufacturing and industrial purposes. The establishment, regulation, and control of manufacturing and industrial enterprises, as well as other matters pertaining to the comfort, convenience, and prosperity of the people, come within the powers of the States, and the Supreme Court of the United States holds that the authority of a State over navigable waters within its borders, and the shores and beds thereof, is plenary, subject only to such action as Congress may take in the execution of its powers under the Constitution to regulate commerce among the several States.

And again, General Mackenzie says:

Regarding the proposition to empower the Secretary of War to authorize the use and development of water power at localities not improved by the United States, it should be borne in mind that natural water power—that is, power made available by the existence of natural falls and rapids in a river—is appurtenant to riparian ownership, and the right to use it is governed by State laws on the subject of private property. As above set forth, the Federal Government can regulate and control it only to such extent as may be necessary in the interest of navigation.

In the above extracts the rights of the Federal Government are clearly defined. What kind of power is this at Muscle Shoals? Is it artificial? No; it is "natural water power." What kind of power is natural water power? Why, General Mackenzie, the Chief Engineer, says it is "power made available by the existence of natural falls and rapids in a river." How is it at Muscle Shoals? Since the morning stars first sang together, the power that God himself created when He sent the waters of the beautiful Tennessee on its course to the Gulf of Mexico have remained unchanged. They are to-day what they were at the beginning of time—no change, no diminution, no increase. The Government has not contributed one cent to create these powers. What ownership, I ask, has the Government got there?

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see what the Chief Engineer of the United States Army says about this particular location and bill:

The object of the bill is to permit the development and utilization of the great water power now going to waste on Muscle Shoals, and I see no reason now to object to its favorable consideration by Congress.

Why, Mr. Speaker, should this valuable power be allowed longer to go to "waste?"

One thing more. I read to you now, Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the House, a letter from the Secretary of War on this subject, and I desire your especial attention to it. I have, gentlemen on my side, the facts in this case, and the justice and the equity is with me, according to the law and precedents that have governed in this country for time immemorial.

I will now read a letter from the able jurist and distinguished gentleman, our Secretary of War, Hon. W. H. Taft. This whole matter, as you will see, was submitted to the Secretary of War by the President. It was fully discussed before him by the distinguished chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee [Mr. BURTON of Ohio]; by the Hon. W. P. HEPBURN, chairman of the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and myself. What does the Secretary of War say about it?

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: You refer to me the question whether you ought to veto the bill known as "House bill No. 297," entitled "An act to authorize the construction of dams and power stations on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals, Alabama."

At the close of the Fifty-seventh session of Congress you vetoed a bill not unlike this in its provisions, and the question now is whether you should follow your course in that veto or allow the bill by your signature to become a law. I have conferred with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, who is the author of the bill, and Mr. BURTON, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, and Mr. HEPBURN, chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. I ought to say the bill in the House was considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and was recommended by that committee. The tenor of your message vetoing the former bill was that, in your judgment, where the United States Government had created a water power by its improvements in a river, and in that part of a river which is not navigable, the policy should be adopted of selling or in some way obtaining compensation for the private use of this water power to recoup the Government for its expenditures to improve the navigation of the river. Accepting this as a principle to be followed, it seems to me, nevertheless, that the present bill can be so amended as that its enactment into law will not contravene the policy approved by you in the message. The improvement in the Tennessee River at and near Muscle Shoals is of two kinds. At Elk Shoals, which are above Muscle Shoals, the improvements of the Government have created pools which this bill would give the beneficiaries the right to use for water power, and such a grant would probably be in contravention of the policy approved by you. But with respect to the Muscle Shoals proper, which lie opposite to the Government canal on the north side of the Tennessee River, 14 miles in length, the Government has done nothing to effect the natural water power that there exists; it has never increased or diminished such power; indeed, it has placed no structure in the river at all for that distance. If the bill can now be amended so as to confine the privilege granted thereunder to the 14 miles in the Muscle Shoals, opposite the 14-mile canal which is on the north side of the river, the grant under this act will, in effect, be nothing more than the right to tie the dams to be constructed to the strip of land owned by the Government between the north bank of the river and the south bank of the 14-mile canal. The bill makes proper provision for the supervision of any such use of this Government strip of land, so that the Government interests, either in the ownership of the property or in the navigation of the river, will not be injuriously affected. It is, of course, in the interest of the public that improvements of this kind should be encouraged, and in streams in which there has been no expenditure of money to create water power it does not seem to me necessary to extend the policy of demanding compensation for such a slight use of Government lands as this privilege involves.

I have heretofore spoken to Senator MORGAN and to Mr. RICHARDSON and have said to them that if they secure an amendment to the bill so as to exclude Elk Shoals and limit this to the 14 miles of Muscle Shoals that I will recommend to you that the bill be approved. A concurrent resolution has been passed by both Houses requesting a return of the bill for amendment, and the amendments suggested will be put in. Mr. RICHARDSON has brought the amendments of the bill to me, and in conference with General Mackenzie, the Chief of Engineers, we have examined them. They bring the bill quite within the suggestion of this letter.

Very sincerely, yours, WM. H. TAFT.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the existing market value of this undeveloped water power?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It has never been tested or tried.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Who owns the shore on the other side of the river?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The riparian owners—citizens.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Have they sold to your company?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is there any market value of their undeveloped water power?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. None in the world, because it has never been tested or tried.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is your proposition?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. My proposition is to let any company or individual go there and locate power dams and stations. My bill does not provide for any specific company. It says "any person or persons or corporation." Of course they will have to buy the interest of the riparian owners. You know very well that the Government, as I have read, has no control of anything at that place except the flow of the water—the navigation. The State of Alabama, which is properly protected in this bill——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I gathered the impression from the letter you read that the Government is the riparian owner on one side and private individuals on the other. Am I right?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. You are not entirely right about that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the fact?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The Government in part is an owner on the strip of land between the canal and the river, which I will explain to you, as I have the map here showing what lands are owned by the Government and by citizens.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In order to obtain a better understanding of this matter I will ask, Is it not true that for at least two-thirds of the distance on the northerly side the Government, for 10 miles or more, is the owner of the strip?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No; the gentleman from Ohio is entirely mistaken on that, and I have the map here to show the ownership.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How many miles do you concede there is ownership on the part of the Government?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The map that is brought here from the Engineers Department shows that individuals own, without an accurate estimate, more than three-fourths of the 14 miles.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I will show the gentleman the map, and that is better than the statement of either one of us.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is the Government the owner of any part of the riparian rights?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How much?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I could not make an accurate statement of it. I am going to show the map, and the number of acres.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You do not know how many miles the Government owns?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I could not tell, and I do not think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] can tell, although he is better informed on rivers and harbors than I am.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not true that the places in which private individuals own riparian rights are where there is a wide strip between the river and the canal, but that of the actual length of the canal, much the larger part, 10 miles, at least, belongs to the Government, there being a narrow strip for the larger share of the distance? Is not that correct?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not know that I can admit that as being correct, because the map does not disclose that as the truth. I know that the Government does own some of the land in that intervening strip between the canal and the river.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has the gentleman any idea what the value of the Government's property is as riparian owner?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If it is of any value at all, it is, as Secretary Taft says, insignificant. It lies along a narrow strip of land between the canal and the river.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In other words, the Government's interest is practically worthless, from the gentleman's point of view?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Practically so, and I think Secretary Taft considered it that way.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield to me for a further question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would like to ask if, in one draft of this bill, as suggested, a provision was not inserted that compensation should be made to the Government for its ownership as riparian proprietor, and under what circumstances that was stricken out?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio has asked that question, because Secretary Taft considered that it was too small a matter for the Government of the United States to engage in that kind of business—to lay restraints and conditions upon a power that would be of such vast benefit to these people in that section. He says so, and here is his handwriting where that provision was eliminated.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is it not true that it was inserted by some one in the Department?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It was by the Chief Engineer, and when it was brought to the attention of Secretary Taft—I suppose the gentleman from Ohio wants me to state what occurred there——

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Just as the gentleman chooses.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not want to violate any privilege of conversation with public officers, but after it was brought there and the matter was discussed, Secretary Taft said, substantially, that the Government's rights would be better protected without the provision than with it left in there. And that the small interest that the Government had as riparian owner in the strip of land between the canal and the river was not sufficient for consideration in that way. The Chief Engineer agreed with him and it was stricken out, and here is Secretary Taft's handwriting in the original bill where it was eliminated. I have stated substantially, as I remember it, how this occurred and what was said.

Now, Mr. Speaker, briefly the history of this bill. It was introduced in the early part of this Congress and was referred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and to a subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. That subcommittee reported unanimously to the full committee. The committee reported unanimously in favor of the bill. It came to the House and it was passed unanimously by the House of Representatives and went to the Senate and was passed there and went to the President.

There never was any intention on the part of this bill by its author or anyone connected with its consideration to cover anything except the full length of what was known as the "Muscle Shoals Canal;" but by accident and mistake it was discovered, after it reached the President, the area covered by the bill went farther east to the mouth of Mallets Creek instead of stopping at Tick Island, as it was intended in the original bill, which was and is opposite the mouth of the canal. I did not know that the mouth of Mallets Creek was as high up the river as it was. It went, as I say, to Mallets Creek, extending over a space of 5 miles of the river. There was no contemplation for a moment of putting a dam across that part of the river, because every foot of these 5 miles is the navigable channel of the river, being between the mouth of Elk River and the head of the canal.

Now, gentlemen will see upon this map which is in front of us that here is Mallets Creek, and here is the head of the canal on the north side of the Tennessee River. This bill covers this territory here from the head of this canal down to this part of the canal on the south side of the river; that is, down to the western line of section 10—below Bainbridge. The canal is built around the entire Muscle Shoals, 14 miles. The bill covers this portion from the head of the canal on the south side to the foot of the canal, also on the south side. The canal, as you see, is on the north side of the river. The power works will be on the south side of the river. The works will be below the head of the canal.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the Government own any of the riparian property?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How much?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That is a question I can not answer. I have the map here and the gentleman can look at it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman's bill contemplates giving the riparian rights owned by the Government to these parties without compensation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Suppose the dam is put in a place where the Government does not own any of the land?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But whatever rights of the Government the bill gives these parties it gives without compensation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; but that is because they are so insignificant. Secretary Taft, in his letter, says that the Government's ownership, as a riparian owner, is sufficiently protected by the provisions of the bill. What more should the Goverment want than that?

From the head of the canal down to the foot of it there is no place where the Government of the United States can have or will have any valuable rights. It consists of 14 miles of bowlders and dams and rocks, and the Government has demonstrated what it thinks of that place by building a canal 14 miles around it, at a cost of nearly $5,000,000, and there is that water power, just as General McKinstry has said, of great value to those people there, locked up for years and years going to waste, for not a drop of water that passes through the channel of the river from the head to the foot of the canal is anything but waste water, unused and unusable by the Government. Millions of undeveloped wealth is there extended to that section by the bounteous hand of nature. There it is locked up. What right has the Government to charge for it? It did not create it, nor has it spent one cent in making that magnificent power there. Alabama is protected in this bill, because Alabama owns or controls by her laws the riparian rights and the bed of the river, and the Government owns nothing in it but the right of navigation. The fact is, that if capitalists were not so timid about their investments, one having the consent of the State of Alabama could locate a power work at Muscle Shoals and the Government could not disturb it unless it interfered with navigation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Would the State of Alabama get the compensation if the people who build here have to pay the riparian owners?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not know what the State of Alabama is going to do. Alabama has spent no money to create that power there, but the State does control by its laws riparian rights and the bed of the river.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do individual owners own it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does the gentleman mean the riparian rights?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Whoever improves it, if the riparian rights are of any value, have to pay the private owners?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes, of course.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And if ours are of any value, they would have to pay us, provided they were of any value?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, a bill similar in title and for the same locality was vetoed by the President of the United States at the close of the Fifty-seventh Congress. I submit the veto in full:

[House Document No. 427, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 14051, entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to N. F. Thompson and associates to erect a dam and construct a power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama."

The recent development of the application of water power to the production of electricity available for use at considerable distances has revealed an element of substantial value in streams which the Government is, or is liable to be, called upon to improve for the purposes of navigation, and this value, in my judgment, should be properly utilized to defray the cost of the improvement. Wherever the Government constructs a dam and lock for the purpose of navigation, there is a water fall of great value. It does not seem right or just that this element of local value should be given away to private individuals of the vicinage, and at the same time the people of the whole country should be taxed for the local improvement. It seems clear that justice to the taxpayers of the country demands that when the Government is or may be called upon to improve a stream the improvement should be made to pay for itself, so far as practicable. I am advised that at another point on the same river to which this bill refers there is an authorized project for improvement by the Government at a cost of $800,000, and that an offer has been made by a responsible citizen to do the entire work without expense to the Government, provided he can be authorized to use the water power. I think it is desirable that the entire subject of granting privileges of the kind referred to in this bill should be considered in a comprehensive way, and that a general policy appropriate to the new conditions caused by the advance in electrical science should be adopted, under which these valuable rights will not be practically given away, but will be disposed of after full competition in such a way as shall best conserve the public interests.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 3, 1903.

This veto of the President came to the House after the usual complimentary resolutions had been adopted about the Speaker, Hon. D. B. Henderson. In fact, it reached the House just preceding the expiration of the Fifty-seventh Congress. I am not complaining that I had no opportunity to present my views to the President, nor am I complaining that I had no notice of the impending veto. The President had no time or opportunity, so near were we to the close of that session of Congress. But I desire to call the attention of the House to the language used in the veto message: "Wherever the Government constructs a dam and lock for the purpose of navigation there is a waterfall of great value." In view of that language, I have never believed if the President had known that no dam had ever been built by the Government at Muscle Shoals that he would have interposed that veto. The President was correct on principle.

I desire briefly to refer to this locality and its surroundings. The development of this water power will bring untold benefits to a large population. Muscle Shoals is in the heart of the fertile valley of the Tennessee. Within 5 miles of the lower end of the canal are the three flourishing cities of Florence, Sheffield, and Tuscumbia, embraced in an area of 5 miles, the three towns aggregating a population of quite 18,000 people. Iron furnaces, cotton factories, and numerous other industries are there, and the three towns are linked by an electric railroad. But a few miles above the head of the canal lie the two cities of the Decaturs, containing a population of not less than 20,000 for the two cities. Great machine and railroad shops are there and other valuable industries. A few miles east is the city of Huntsville, with a population of not less than 20,000 people, with nine cotton mills in full operation. Between these towns and cities is an active growing population of agriculturists. Nashville, Tenn., is not more than 125 miles and Birmingham, Ala., not more 100 miles from where these powers will be located. Electricity for all its growing and varied purposes will be applied to the machinery of these towns and cities, as generated by these powers. Nashville, Tenn., has a population of over 100,000 people, and Birmingham, Ala., the wonder of the growth of this century, has a population of more than 125,000 people. Electricity is one-half cheaper than coal used for making steam. The Muscle Shoals has a horsepower exceeded in the United States only by Niagara Falls. The development of the water powers of Alabama will afford us more wealth and prosperity than our mineral resources. It is no time in the presence of such gifts from nature for us to stickle about meaningless stipulations that hamper and harass development.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER].

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, if the pending resolution is adopted it will be in furtherance of the purpose of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], the Chief of Engineers, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in what they have done heretofore with regard to this question. There was certainly no purpose on the part of the Chief of Engineers or of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—and, I take it, none on the part of the gentleman from Alabama, and his assurances in that respect ought to be sufficient to convince us of that fact—to deal with any part of this river except the shoals lying along or opposite to the canal which was built by the Government. The building of the canal, as I understand it—and all I know about it is the information furnished by the engineering department of the Government—had nothing at all to do with any of the power lying in the river, in the shoals along that canal, which power it is desired by the people of that part of the country to utilize. There is a fine river, with a great volume of water which those people ought to be able to make use of to very great advantage to themselves and to their interests, and the only purpose of this legislation is to permit them to do it. It takes nothing from the Government of the United States. The interests of navigation, the supply of water in that canal, the supply of water in that river, are abundantly protected, in the judgment not only of the committee, but of the Secretary of War, so that no harm can come to the Government by permitting the people of Alabama to utilize that great power. As the gentleman has so well said, the power was created by nature. It exists there. Its utilization is supposed to be prevented by the lack of the permissive and affirmative license of the United States Government, which this legislation seeks to grant, and I trust there will be no hesitation on the part of the House in now giving, in the adoption of this resolution, to the people interested in this measure the advantage which the House no doubt designed to give to them when it passed the original bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire if the committee or if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] has any idea of the value of this water power that is being discussed? I understand it is a great power and of great utility. Has anybody any information as to what that water power is worth in its present undeveloped state? Is it worth anything or is it worth developing; and if it is worth developing, how much is it worth? That will give us some information as to what the riparian rights on either side are worth, if anything.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I can throw very little light on that subject. It is, as I said, a great power, but to what advantage it can be used, I presume, would not be determined until its use is taken into serious consideration and the cost of applying it to the industrial purposes ascertained.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In other words, then, the committee has no knowledge of the value of the power?

Mr. WANGER. No light at all upon that subject. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama has fourteen minutes remaining.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in the first instance, I desire to call attention to the rather unusual history of this measure. In the Fifty-seventh Congress a bill passed both Houses of Congress granting the right to construct a single dam in this locality. It was a very mild measure in comparison with this, which authorizes the construction of at least six or seven. That bill went to the President and was vetoed. In the last Congress a similar bill for one dam was introduced and was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The committee came to the conclusion that it should not be reported favorably, and it died for the session. In this connection I may say that there has not been the least possible repulsion between the two committees on this subject.

It is true a somewhat different policy has been pursued by them. In this present Congress this bill was introduced providing for the privilege of locating dams in a stretch of 32 miles in the Tennessee River, a portion of the stream in which perhaps ten or twelve dams could be constructed. It passed here without objection when about twenty or thirty Members were present, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, went to the Senate, and then was taken to the President. It is conceded that this bill was faulty in two or three particulars. It is conceded that it passed the War Department when it was faulty in the same particulars. In the first place, the measure as originally introduced and passed, as well as approved by the Secretary of War, did not take into account at all that the canals in this stretch of river were located one on the northerly side and one on the southerly side. It left out of account the fact that the portion of the river in which dams were permitted extended for a considerable distance at each end of the canals, while avowedly intended to be merely of the same length as the Muscle Shoals Canal. In this respect it was faulty, and I want to say that even now it gives rights for about 2 miles below Muscle Shoals Canal on the northerly side and about 5 miles on the southerly, the end of the canal being in section 3, and the boundary line of the privilege granted is the west line of section 16——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will permit me to put a question.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Do you not know it as a fact that just below the mouth of the canal the river forks and quite an extensive portion is on the north side?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And for that reason Mr. Kingman, formerly engineer, allowed a riprap dam to be built here across part of the river that is not navigable at all and never has been, and this area extended down to section 10, right opposite here [illustrating on map]?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. My statement is absolutely correct——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But misleading, I think.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That there is a considerable distance below the canal on the northerly and southerly side.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Do you contend that letting it run down there will interfere with the navigation of the river?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It might and it might not. I will come to that proposition later. This bill went to the President and there these objections were made and it is returned here for certain amendments. But I want to say to Members of the House that the substantial objections to this bill are not cured by these amendments.

I desire to call attention to the development of water power in this country. It is an asset of the very greatest value. We are at the very beginning of the development of water power in the production of electricity. In a few years it will be more valuable than all our silver mines, and probably more valuable than all our silver and gold mines combined. It has been allowed to run waste or has been abandoned with the development of coal, but now it has come into use again. I do not anticipate that for one year or five years or perhaps for ten years water power will be developed on any large scale in this locality, but it is one of the most valuable privileges in the way of water-power development in the United States. The gentleman from Maine asked the question if there was any estimate of the value of the water power here in Muscle Shoals Canal.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And I would like to have the gentleman state the amount of horsepower that is contemplated to be developed. I suppose it is contemplated here by this succession of dams to develop power and concentrate it by electrical appliances?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. That would be the most natural development. Messrs. MORGAN, CARMACK, and OVERMAN were constituted a committee in the Senate to report on the Tennessee River, and on the 13th of December last they made a report—quite an elaborate one. They state, omitting the preliminary portion:

> Taking 99,875 horsepower as the daily capacity of the river at Muscle Shoals in average years and computing its value at the annual cost of horsepower generated by steam at Ensley or Birmingham, Ala., and the saving in the cost of water power at Muscle Shoals almost exceeds belief.
> The cost of horsepower generated by steam at the places where the coal mines are in sight of the engines and with the best equipment and good results is an average of $30 per annum for each horsepower. At this rate the 51,000 horsepower furnished at Muscle Shoals daily, at the lowest stage of water, would cost $1,530,000 per annum, and the 99,875 horsepower furnished at the annual average stage of water would cost $2,996,250 if it was produced by steam in the Birmingham district, which is the best in the South.

So that, with the average flow of water there, there is a horsepower in this locality, which we are asked to vote away, of a value of $2,996,000 per annum.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. We own the riparian right on the one side only.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. A considerable share on the northerly side. Now, the first point I want to make is this: We are asked to improve a number of streams where there is a steep descent. I say to this House that the most expensive projects for river and harbor improvement, and those which are most questionable, I think, involve the construction of locks and dams in streams where rapids or shoals make it necessary. Probably the expense for this purpose may surpass that for all the harbors in the United States. Now, I say it is but fair that when physical characteristics of a river make necessary expensive improvements by locks and dams the Government should take to itself the counterpart of that—a participation in the water power created by that physical condition. We have made several attempts in that direction of late. Only a short time since, on this very river below Chattanooga, an application was made for the construction of a dam. It was at the very place where in the improvement of the river a lock and dam would be constructed to subserve navigation. The parties making the application willingly agreed to build the dam and the lock at their own expense and turn it over to the United States for its use, and have expended something like $800,000 on that work, which is now under way.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Is it not a fact that in the mountain section on the Tennessee River, where the dam is now being built or proposed to be built, that the consideration was that it was to improve the navigation of the Tennessee River, and that it would not have been allowed unless the Government prescribed the terms that, in erecting the dam, it was for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Tennessee River at that point?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly. Another instance is in the Rock River, in the State of Illinois, by a bill passed within a year. The condition is made that if navigation ever requires it those who possess the privilege of constructing the dam shall build the lock at their own expense and maintain it. There is pending to-day before a committee of Congress a proposition to expend $108,250 for the finishing of a dam and lock on the Coosa River, creating a navigable pool just for the sake of the water power. The total amount of water power which they expect to develop is 2,000 horsepower—one-fiftieth part of what would be developed in this locality and which the House is asked to vote away. I dislike in any way to attack the action of another committee or to stand in the way of anything of this kind, but I really do not think that I should be doing my duty to the House unless I pointed out the great importance of this, the immense value here that you are asked to vote away.

The President sanctioned this idea of cooperation in his veto message in 1903, saying:

> It seems clear that justice to the taxpayers of the country demands that when the Government is or may be called upon to improve a stream the improvement should be made to pay for itself, so far as practicable.
> I think it is desirable that the entire subject of granting privileges of the kind referred to in this bill should be considered in a comprehensive way and that a general policy appropriate to the new conditions caused by the advance in electrical science should be adopted under which these valuable rights will not be practically given away but will be disposed of after full competition in such a way as will best conserve the public interest.

And in the same message he says:

> It does not seem right or just that this element of local value should be given away to private individuals of the vicinage and at the same time the people of the whole country should be taxed for the local improvement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I suggest that the gentleman has not read all of the President's message.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think I have read all the portions that pertain to this.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does not the President say in that veto message, where the dam and power has been created—that there was no dam there at all?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. He may say that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And based his veto on misinformation?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The statement made by him is entirely correct, and is a statement not of a particular situation, but of a general principle.

I want to read further from this report of Senators MORGAN, CARMACK, and OVERMAN in regard to this question of cooperation. On page 44 of the report, after referring to the Chattanooga case, where the dam is built by private parties, Senator MORGAN says:

> The principle is also adopted that it is lawful and expedient that locks and dams may be constructed by private enterprise and capital in consideration of the perpetual right to use the water power which they will produce. The success of this plan is already demonstrated in the cost of the dam to be constructed at Hales Bar below Chattanooga.

And again he says:

> This new plan of cooperative work in river improvement is also applied, by acts of Congress, to the upper waters of the Cumberland and other rivers under varying contracts. The plan, or expedient, is founded upon the money value of the water power generated in the shoal places of many rivers that can be made navigable only by removing or controlling such obstructions.
> We have reached the point of time in which the sedate consideration of the value of water power must prevail. It is already among the greatest actual reenforcements of the money resources of the Government, aside from taxation, in the improvement of the navigation of all our mountain water courses. This new departure has come to stay, and it is a grand step in our progress.

And again, on page 48, in speaking of the proposed locks and dams, he says:

> These locks and dams, estimated at $1,000,000 each, which is probably twice the actual cost, would be eagerly taken by the private capital and constructed for the use of the water power, as is being done at Hales Bar.

And then again, on page 50, he quotes the engineer who has performed the work on the Tennessee River, who says:

> It might be well in this connection to consider the possibility of Muscle Shoals Canal being done away with and locks and dams substituted therefor, the latter to be built by private enterprise for water-power purposes.

Two arguments have been made which I wish to answer. It is said you have rapids here, and as this canal, 14½ miles long, has already been constructed, you can give away control of these rapids without doing any harm. The first answer to that is this: If ever the Tennessee is improved in such a way as to make its navigation efficient, it will be necessary to go out into the main stream and construct a new canal. Why? The present canal is constructed on the northerly side, and for a good share of the distance there is an overhanging bluff. You can not extend the canal in that direction or in any direction unless you take it out into the river. There is another reason. There are numerous streams that come down from the hills and empty into the river on the north side. In order to take care of these it is necessary that they should go under this canal. In providing for these, its depth is limited to a channel of not less than 5 feet. Now, it does not take any statement of statistics or any reasoning to show that if the Tennessee River is to subserve navigation for the Tennessee Valley you must have a canal considerably more than 5 feet in depth.

Senator MORGAN, in this report, advocates a 12-foot stage, and advocates the construction of locks and dams right here in this region where it is proposed to allow private parties to construct dams and enjoy the water power produced there for nothing. I would not be willing to commit myself to so great a depth as that, but I do say that if ever the navigation of the river is developed, it would be necessary to utilize this portion of the river.

Ah, but they say the bills make provision that whenever the Government wants to construct locks they may be constructed in connection with these dams. Just see how easy it is to show the fallacy of that idea. Dams for the purpose of developing water power would not be built at the same intervals as those adapted for navigation. The object of their construction would be to get the greatest amount of headway. The intervals between them would be presumably longer than between dams constructed for navigation. If you start to improve the river you would have to tear out these dams erected for the purpose of creating water power and establish others in other places.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If I do not interrupt the gentleman too much, and I cheerfully yielded to him, I would like to ask him this question: Do you contend that any money that the United States has ever spent at Muscle Shoals has created any power there at all?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; I do not, unless it be from the canal there. I will come to that point in a minute. On this point of the construction at Muscle Shoals Senator MORGAN says:

> When these locks and dams are paid for by private parties, as nearly all of them will be in consideration of the value of the water power created by them, the movement takes such a form of public and private benefit to all concerned that its blessings to the whole country are beyond computation.

Speaking of a practical policy to be pursued, he says:

> The number and location of these necessary improvements of navigation and the question of their availability as generators of power for the supply of industries operated by private parties should be speedily determined by official surveys to be made by the Government.

And that is just what I say about it, gentlemen of the House. We should not grant any of these water privileges unless we have a careful survey made and see the bearing that it will have upon future projects for navigation.

Now, in further answer to the argument that there is no navigation at present along here where these shoals are, I will say that you must consider a river as an entirety. The jurisdiction of the Government extends over rapid and smooth water alike. The water supply is an important feature in it and you can not divide it, no matter how different the degree of descent may be.

There is another point which I am surprised has attracted so little notice. I have a map here which shows the abutting ownership on the northerly side. It is rather voluminous and perhaps it is hardly worth while to undo it here; but according to this map at least 10 miles of the abutting property on the northerly side of that stream is owned by the United States Government. Some one in the War Department thought it was but fair and just to provide that there should be compensation for that riparian right and inserted a provision to that effect. I do not know who struck it out, whether it was Secretary Taft or not, but I judge it was, from the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Now, here is a water power that at the average stage in these 14 miles is worth $2,996,000 per annum. When you have built all the dams and power houses and means for transmission of power, much the largest share of that $2,996,000 will remain as profit—certainly more than half. Well, now, what do you say about the value of that abutting property where the flowage rights are? Why, the time is coming, as it may be confidently predicted, within the lives of most of us here, when that abutting land will be valued, not by the mile, not by the acre, but by the foot, and it will be more valuable per foot front than the frontage on many a street in some of our cities. And yet we are asked, without any reservation, without any provision for compensation, to give this right away at one fell swoop, not merely for one dam, but for all the dams that can be placed in 16 or 18 miles of that river. What would be some of the results? In the first place, if we gave away this water power—the most valuable of any that is available on any navigable stream in the country of which I know, where there is any prospect of improvement—what right would we have to make reservations in the future? What would we say to these men who came here and offered to expend $108,000 for the privilege of developing one-fiftieth part of the amount of water power which here will be given away—these men who cooperate with the Government, and as compensation for that privilege offer to complete that dam? What right would we have in any other case similar to that at Chattanooga, where they have not only built dam and lock, but made great concessions to the people of Chattanooga in furnishing them electric light for a long period of years? I want to say that it is not fair, after we have made such stringent reservations below Chattanooga, to give away, without one iota of consideration, tenfold—yes, perhaps, twenty-fold—greater water power in another part of the river, without anything that looks toward compensation whatever. Of course, it is in the power of this House to do it—to cut it loose without reservation—but it would seem to be the giving up of the rights of the Government, and a disregard for the welfare of the people, such as would meet with condemnation from the people if we were to do so.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Before the gentleman takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Can you point us to any instance where the Government has not expended any public moneys in the erection of dams that created power, where they have charged anybody for the power?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly; the case of Chattanooga; though there has been some improvement there.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. That was in the middle of the river, and the erection of the dam was for the purpose of the improvement of navigation.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. By the way, the Government has spent more than $5,000,000 here in the improvement of that canal right alongside.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understand that, but you have admitted that it has not created one ounce of power.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. There is a certain amount of power going through the canal; but what made it necessary to expend this $5,000,000 was the existence of those rapids there. And to answer the gentleman's question, does the gentleman say that where an expenditure of $5,000,000 is made because rapids exists in a river, and the Government owns 10 miles of front on that river abutting on the rapids, that it has no interest in that water power and is not entitled to say that a private owner shall not take it without compensation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not contend anything of the kind, and never so asserted; but I contend that where the Government had not expended one dollar of money and has only the control of navigation and can not object unless navigation is interfered with or menaced or threatened, that the Government has no rights there that supersede those of the State.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman can answer this: Does he know of any instance in a navigable river, in the portion where navigation is, where parties have sought to construct dams without the consent of Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No, I do not; but the gentleman from Ohio has failed to point out any instance where the Government has ever charged in a case similar to this——

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think they are all similar to this, with this exception, that they have spent more money here than anywhere else.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. This is not similar to the Chattanooga mountain section dam, because the Government realizes in that respect for the use of the dam and the improvements and navigation of the river. The gentleman will not contend here that the establishment of the dam as is proposed in this case interferes with navigation?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I answered that question at considerable length by saying that if the river is ever improved on a large scale dams will block navigation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does the gentleman contend that the dam there now interferes with navigation?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No; not at present. I do not claim that it does, but you must take the river as a whole and not a part of it; you must consider it in its entirety.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know any instance where the Government has required a lump sum, apart from the construction of their work, or an annual reservation of a sum, for the protection and use of the water of any navigable stream?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I can give the very best answer to that. In a bill passed March 3, 1899, pertaining to this very locality, is this provision:

Provided further, That until the plans and location of the works herein authorized, so far as they affect the interests of navigation, have been approved by the Secretary of War the improvements shall not be commenced or built, and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to fix reasonable charges for use of said power.

Mr. MANN. But there has never been any money collected on that.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Because the works are not built.

Mr. MANN. Because of that provision being in there.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the navigation of Muscle Shoals has been improved by the Government by the completion of a canal and certain locks along the northern side of the river for a distance of 14 miles. The slope of the river in that 14 miles is about 128 feet. The bed of the river is a succession of rocks, some of them submerged, hundreds of them above the surface—in other words, it is filled with bowlders. It was deemed by the engineers utterly impossible to improve that by the use of the bed of the river for slack-water navigation through dams and locks, so that they resorted to the other method of constructing a canal with locks. There is a strip of land about 300 feet—nearly uniform, I am told—between the margin of the canal and the northern shore of the river, in which the Government has an easement. I do not understand it to be the owner of any of the fee or, if any, in considerable quantities. They have the right to construct the canal——

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman from Iowa will allow me, I have made considerable inquiry on that subject, and the larger share of this land, it seems, belonged originally to the Government, and was conveyed to the State of Alabama, and then reconveyed back to the Government.

Mr. HEPBURN. My understanding is that the Government has the easement; that it has only the rights in the strip as would be incidental to the ownership of the canal. Now, that is the present situation. Remember that this portion of the river is not navigated at this time to any considerable extent. The parties having it in charge have resorted to the remarkable method of improving the upper end of the river first. That would be a very valuable contribution to the commerce of the country if they had some other process or method, by balloon or otherwise, of bringing vessels up to the canal; but up to this time they have not succeeded in the improvement of the lower obstruction, and hence there is considerable difficulty in getting any considerable amount of navigation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman refers to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I think it was begun probably before a Committee on Rivers and Harbors had existence—certainly before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] had any control over it. I do not think that is one of his methods. At all events, this improvement was undertaken at a time when river navigation was in a very advanced condition from that of to-day. The navigation of the western rivers is constantly diminishing, not increasing, and the scheme adopted was supposed to be sufficient at that time and in harmony with what was then in vogue. Five feet was determined to be the proper depth of the canal. There is no probability that that will ever be increased or the necessity for its increase ever exist. Now, a new departure is proposed by the gentleman from Ohio in treating this whole subject. Up to this time, I am informed, the Government has never received a farthing for the use of any of the powers which it from time to time has granted, and they are to be numbered by scores, if not by hundreds. I have no doubt but that the figures that have been given by the gentleman of the value of this would be approximately correct, if he could only remove this power to the vicinity of some of our great cities; but there is a difficulty in that, I would submit to him. This is comparatively, so far as industries are concerned, in an undeveloped wilderness. There are no great cities near this locality, probably within the limit to which electrical power may be transmitted. I will not say that there are not towns within that vicinity, but there are no manufacturing centers there. The demand for this power has to be created. The gentleman talks about the time when these riparian owners will be able to sell their property by the square foot. That is very remote. There are many localities in this country that would be of immense value if we could concentrate a density of population upon them similar to that of New York City, but there is a difficulty in the way; and so it is in estimating the value of this property. These shoals have been there for centuries, and no dollar of capital has been found up to this time to invest in them. This bill simply proposes that those few corporations that may be created under the laws of the State of Tennessee may avail themselves of this power. It is a question whether it is best to invite capital into the enterprises and have the benefits that will come from their utilization, or shall we sit back, as the gentleman proposes, demanding these exorbitant sums, driving away those who otherwise might possibly be induced to make these investments?

The Congress at a recent session gave to gentlemen the right to create an immense water power near the city of Keokuk. There are within 100 miles of that city probably 300,000 people living now. There are several towns of thirty, forty, and fifty thousand inhabitants. They have had that right for nearly two years. They have been unable to finance that enterprise. They were required to erect certain works in the interest of navigation that would probably cost half a million of dollars. The dam that they proposed to erect would probably cost $3,000,000. The power that would be generated is estimated at a hundred thousand horsepower, according to the estimate of the gentleman, worth $3,000,000 a year; yet capital does not readily go into such enterprises as this, and they have been unable, up to this time, to raise the money to begin that. I think there would be great value in this grant, if it were differently situated—if you could induce capital to go there. If the manufacturing enterprises needed the power, it would be of great value, but all that is an experiment. I think myself that it is infinitely better that we should encourage the use of the forces in our rivers rather than strive to prepare them for a commerce that will not traverse them—that is behind the times and that is becoming obsolete. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, answering the first contention, that this is a new idea that the Government should in some form utilize this water power to aid navigation, the all-sufficient answer is that a condition has been recently created which makes the situation entirely different from what it was. There is water power going to waste all over the country. In earlier days a considerable share of manufacturing received its power from water power, but with the abundant supplies of coal, it was used; and hence the utilization of water power largely went out of use. Now, it is coming back into use again. We are just at the beginning of a development, as I said in opening, of the value of water power. But, it is said, this is an experiment down there. Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that we ought not to deal with experiments. Is it not well for us to wait until we have some certainty as to what this privilege is worth, and not give away a franchise which promises to have almost inestimable value? Had we not better wait until we know something about it?

Water power is not going to be any experiment in the future. It is going to be of the greatest value—to furnish electric light in cities, power to run street railways, all kinds of power which may be needed in the various demands of modern life. We can not afford to throw it away. It is said that there are no cities in that neighborhood. The gentleman overlooks the fact that with a good-sized copper wire you can carry electricity a hundred miles without any appreciable decrease in the force of the current. Indeed, they are planning now to carry it from Niagara Falls 160 miles to the city of Syracuse for the propulsion of street railroads.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, they are carrying it 200 miles in the State of California.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It will be carried to Memphis, Birmingham, Montgomery, Nashville; and it seems to me it was in disregard of such considerations at this—overlooking these important facts—that this bill was reported and came before us here. Is the House willing to give away a privilege of this value? I sincerely hope in the navigation of rivers this plan for cooperation can be still further adopted. It is a strange coincidence that only two days before this measure came up in the House this proposition came up to spend $108,000 in the completion of a dam which will increase the navigable length of a river perhaps by 20 miles, in consideration of their being allowed to use the water power there. The dam at Chattanooga is nearly finished. When the President sent in his veto message in 1903, it was a proposition in the air; it was a promoters' idea. Now the foundation stone has been laid and it is nearly the time for the laying of the capstone as well, and it will not be a very long time before the boats on the Tennessee River will be going through that lock and dam, so that it will be used for navigation at the same time it is used for the development of power. I think, Mr. Speaker, when we grant away rights that belong to the Government we should use the utmost care. If there is one danger in representative government it is that an alert, aggressive, self-interested individual or locality may get what it wants because the great mass is inert and half asleep. I am perfectly aware it is an ungracious task to speak here for economy in such a matter as this, but I think I can foresee and that you can foresee the great importance of this matter—the development that is sure to come when spindles shall be set running and the music of machinery shall be created by that water power. The fact of its existence will some day give to that locality in Alabama and the nearby country in Tennessee a distinctive quality as a great manufacturing area. This Government ought not to throw away its rights or neglect the paramount interests of the people. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIDSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DAVIDSON. To ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Is it not true that in the last Congress a bill granting similar rights to a corporation to construct a dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, compelled those people to build a lock, a dry dock, and the appurtenances thereto, and a plant for lighting and operating the same at their own expense for the use of the Government for navigation purposes?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I am not familiar with the provisions of that bill, because it was reported by another committee, but I so understand it. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, although I do not know that I shall occupy it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio that the balance of his time be given to me. I have the right to conclude.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman can use his own time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But I desire to have the time the gentleman has reserved, if he will give it to me.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Four minutes remains to the gentleman from Alabama and five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I yield my time to the gentleman from Alabama. It is possible I may want a minute or so, but I think not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin just referred to a bill which passed the last Congress in reference to a dam at Keokuk.

I had much to do with that measure in the committee, and to a large extent drafted it as it went through, and certainly put the provisions in the bill which the gentleman refers to, and I can assure the gentleman that there are just as many safeguards and provisions in this bill in the interest of the Government as there were in that bill. In the pending measure it is provided that if the Government at any time desires to construct locks, the party to whom this privilege is given shall furnish the title, shall furnish the power, shall furnish the light, shall furnish the same things that were provided in the Mississippi case. In the Mississippi they proposed to utilize some plant which the Government had already possessed itself of. They proposed to destroy some works which the Government had created, and we provided in that case, as we provide in this case, that all the safeguards that are possible shall be preserved to the Government, and that the Government shall be put to no extra expense by the improvement.

Mr. DAVIDSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I beg the gentleman to excuse me. I have only four minutes granted to me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question for Congress to determine is this: The gentleman from Ohio says that we ought not to grant the right to dam a river unless we require the person receiving the grant to pay to the General Government. Pay what? Shall we provide that in the various States in the Union where navigable waters happen to lie that there shall be no improvement unless the Government gets the big end of the receipts? Shall we forbid the development of power in the country unless the parties developing it shall pay to the Government the biggest share of their profits? That is a matter which, in my judgment, at this time should be left to the State. The gentleman from Ohio says that the water at Muscle Shoals is worth two or three millions a year. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is not worth a cent today. What value has it been in the past? The water has been running in the Tennessee River ever since Congress was organized, and long before. The water has been running there ever since the gentleman and others have been distinguished chairmen of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The water still runs there. Nobody is utilizing its value. Shall the General Government say that before we give to the State the authority to make use of it we shall require these people to pay? What? Twenty-five per cent of the gross receipts, 50 per cent of the net receipts, so many thousand dollars a year into the General Treasury? Or shall we leave that, for the time at least, to the control of the States, reserving as we do in this bill the power of the General Government at any time to regulate the charges which shall be made—to amend the act in any way?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Where is the reservation in the bill?

Mr. MANN. The right to alter, amend, or repeal an act is a right, universally recognized, to give to Congress the power to regulate the charges.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Does the gentleman from Illinois know of any case in this Government or any other government where the right to alter, amend, or repeal was ever utilized to inject into a grant of a privilege a provision for compensation, particularly when the bill studiously omits any provision for compensation—a provision inserted in a number of other bills?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to finish his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] be permitted to finish his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I hope the Speaker will call me down at the end of five minutes, because I do not wish to occupy the time of the House even on this important matter. I may say to the House, that in the last Congress the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had a number of measures before it relating to the construction of dams for water power. A subcommittee of that committee was appointed for the purpose of considering the subject, and I had the honor to be named as chairman of that subcommittee. The question was presented: If the General Government shall give the authority to construct dams across navigable streams, upon what terms shall the authority be granted? In connection with members of the subcommittee, we went carefully into that question, not only with the officials of the War Department, but through correspondence with various engineers throughout the country, and it seemed to be at that time, at least, the almost universal sense and sentiment of the people dealing with this question that it was impossible to obtain the capital to develop water power if the Government should start in upon the idea that the National Government should require corporations to contribute to the National Treasury.

It might be in cases that the persons receiving this grant ought to contribute to somebody some portion of the benefit which is conferred upon them. I do not say nay to that proposition. I am not entirely certain that it may not be proper policy for the Government to require some compensation to be paid into the National Treasury; but I do say without hesitation that Congress is not yet willing to lay down the rule that no development shall be made on navigable waters unless the licensee shall pay to the United States Treasury a substantial sum for the benefit. There is no gentleman on the floor of this House, in my judgment, who would wish to have it said that a river in his own State shall receive no improvement from the adjacent property owners unless they paid to the General Government a portion of their profit.

It has seemed to me, up to the present time, that might be properly left to the control of the States, simply reserving the power on the part of the General Government, if it becomes necessary in the future, to control the charges which shall be made for the use of this power, as we are now proposing to control the rates of the railways; and all that authority is retained in this bill. It is retained also in the general dam bill which I introduced, which was reported to the House recently by the gentleman from Georgia.

If this bill fails to pass, the result is there is no improvement at Muscle Shoals; there is no use of the water power; there is no benefit to the Government and the country from the enormous power, which the gentleman says is worth two or three million dollars a year, and which we see is now going to waste.

The gentleman from Ohio has no proposition to present, the distinguished committee over which he presides has no proposition to present, for the use of the water power at Muscle Shoals. No person in this Congress has any proposition to present upon that subject retaining any portion of the proceeds to the General Government under which any person can obtain the capital with which to develop the power. We passed a bill some years ago granting authority to a company for this same place, retaining the right to fix the compensation, but the parties were unable to raise the money. The power is wasted. I believe that it is far better for the Government to develop the power now going to waste in many parts of the country, to add to the industries of the country, to build up the localities where these navigable streams have power rather than to stand as a dog in the manger, refusing to develop the power ourselves, and refusing to permit others to develop it. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will yield me two minutes. I think it is hardly fair that two persons should respond to the remarks I made without an opportunity to make some reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly. The gentleman gave me five minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It shows on how slim a foundation any provision for compensation is based when they have to run to the provision to "alter, amend, or repeal." They omit the provision for compensation which so frequently comes in these bills. Now, if there is a chance for imposing charges, there is not a Member of this House who in his experience can recollect a single case in which the right to amend a franchise was granted——

Mr. MANN. I did not say there was any power to demand charges, but stated there was power to regulate the charge.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what right has the General Government over a river passing through a State, within the limits of a State, other than that of controlling its navigation? What right or interest has the Government that it can sell to a citizen in a river or the waters of that river?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. It has, first, the paramount right that belongs to the Central Government to control the navigation of that river and all parts of it whether rapid or smooth. Why does anyone come here asking for the right to construct a dam if the Government has not the absolute power to grant or refuse?

Mr. HEPBURN. It has the right to control the navigation, but what else?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. In this specific case the ownership of 10 miles or riparian frontage along one side of the river. As regards taking some action I would say that I should agree with the judgment of Senator Morgan, favoring the creation of a commission to examine into this whole subject and report upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended a few minutes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will not ask that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I yield two minutes of the time left to me to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that the difficulty in the minds of gentlemen on the floor is their inability to judge of this situation correctly at this distance. If the membership of this House could go with me down to Alabama and pass through this canal that we have been discussing, and see its situation, see its connection with the navigable waters of that river, they would be able to decide at once that the $5,000,000 or more that have been expended by the Government in the construction of that canal have not contributed one farthing to the value of this power in any manner whatever. Six miles of that river, known as the "Muscle Shoals," have a fall of 85 feet. There are bowlders in the bed of that river as big as a house and as high as a tree, and the Government could not provide for the navigation of that portion of the river by the expenditure of twenty or thirty million dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I do not feel like making an objection, but it seems to me hardly fair that so many should be allowed to have their time extended.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. We want to get at the facts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have time to reply, if he wishes.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I make no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The proposed power canal, Mr. Speaker, leaves the waters of the Tennessee River at a point below where the navigable canal leaves the river, and the water is returned to the river above where the navigable canal enters it again. It is not fair to compare this situation with that which exists on the Coosa River, to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has alluded. In that case the Government has expended five or six hundred thousand dollars for the construction of a dam and lock for the purpose of navigation. The Government has created the power. It has built a lock and dam, or partially built them. The power is the result, and all that those people have had to do who desired to utilize that power has been to put a flume into the dam, or cut a very short canal around it for the purpose of conveying the water to their power wheels.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. If the gentleman please, from what source does the gentleman obtain his figures that the dam cost five or six hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. BANKHEAD. From the books.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is the gentleman not aware that the engineering report also gives an estimate for the completion of the dam, without any appliances, and that the amount there estimated for the purpose is $108,250, without any reference to power?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is true that the engineering department estimates that about $100,000, or a little more, must be expended before this power can be utilized or even created, and the provision is that those gentlemen who propose to utilize it must complete the lock.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a similar situation here within sight of this Capitol. Exactly the conditions exist that exist at Muscle Shoals, so far as navigation is concerned. A few miles above the city of Washington are the Great Falls of the Potomac. Just above those falls a dam has been built across the river, and the city of Washington has built an aqueduct, and from that dam it receives its water supply. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal runs up the bank of the Potomac River from here to the Great Falls and above and connects with the navigable waters of the Potomac River here and below. Would the gentleman from Ohio, or any other gentleman on this floor, insist that to build a power plant at the falls of the Potomac below the mouth of the aqueduct and along the side of the canal would in any way affect the navigation of the Potomac River or the water supply of Washington?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Alabama maintain for a minute that the resources of the Potomac above this point, and the country to be subserved thereby, compare with the country tributary to the Tennessee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, Mr. Speaker, the principle is the same; it is only a question of degree; that is all. There may be more power in the Tennessee River; it is perhaps a larger river; but the principle involved is the same. Now, I want to say most frankly to this House that if the money expended by the Government of the United States in the construction of this canal in the effort to make the Tennessee River navigable in any manner contributed to the value of this power, in any manner lessened the expense that would be required to build the plant and make the power available, I would not have a word to say on this subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have one minute remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONYNGE). The gentleman is right; he has one minute.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman begins, as he has only a minute remaining, I ask unanimous consent that he have fifteen minutes additional, and that the gentleman from Ohio have a corresponding amount of time, if he chooses to use it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one minute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I admit that I am greatly interested about the success of this bill. It has been near my heart ever since I have been a Member of Congress, and I thank the House for the kind courtesy extended. What is the real status of this bill now? Here it is before you, gentlemen, with the indorsement of the highest engineer officer of this Government, the Chief of Engineers, General Mackenzie, an able, worthy, and distinguished man in his profession. Here it is with the unqualified indorsement of the Secretary of War, a great lawyer, a splendid man, an able Secretary. It stands with the only objection made to it in the fears and apprehensions of the gentleman from Ohio. That is the true condition and the real status of this bill. The gentleman from Ohio is not able, on his part, to give a single instance in the history of this Government where a cent has ever been charged in cases where the Government has not expended money to create public improvements. He asks that the Government shall reap where it has not sown. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds had voted in favor thereof.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Division, Mr. Speaker!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 30.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the resolution was agreed to.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill (H. R. 4527) for preventing the adulteration or misbranding of foods or drugs and for regulating the traffic therein, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the committees.

PUNISHMENT FOR EXTORTION.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9721) to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5481. Every officer, clerk, agent, or employee of the United States, and every person representing himself to be or assuming to act as such officer, clerk, agent, or employee, who is guilty of extortion, under color of his office, clerkship, agency, or employment, or under color of his pretended or assumed office, clerkship, agency, or employment, and every person who shall attempt any act which if performed would make him guilty of such extortion, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, except those officers or agents of the United States otherwise differently and specially provided for in the subsequent sections of this chapter."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment to the law is to prevent the false impersonation of public officers in the land service. Occasionally men have assumed to be public officers for the purpose of extorting money by such assumption from various individuals upon the public lands. The Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office request an amendment to the law so as to include in the punishment of extortion by officers also extortions by those who pretend to be officers. That is all there is involved in this bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I also call up the bill H. R. 13190, to protect birds and their eggs in game and bird preserves.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to hunt, trap, capture, willfully disturb, or kill any bird of any kind whatever, or take the eggs of such birds on any lands of the United States which have already been or may hereafter be set apart or reserved as game preserves or as breeding grounds for birds by any law, proclamation, or Executive order, except under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction in any United States court of competent jurisdiction, be fined in a sum not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, or shall suffer both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

With the following amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Lands:

In line 6 strike out the words "already" and "or may hereafter be."
In line 7 strike out the words "as game preserves or."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, there are some amendments to this bill limiting the effects of the bill to those reserves that have heretofore been set apart. The President, by Executive order, withdrew from settlement a few islands in the Gulf of Mexico and some in the lakes of the North. These islands are useless for agricultural purposes. They are low-lying islands, and have been used from time immemorial for nesting and propagation of wild migratory fowl, and the President withdrew them from entry and reserved them for that purpose. It is in the power of the officers of the Land Department to protect the islands from trespass in a general way by ordering people to keep off. This bill goes a step further, and makes interference with the nests or the eggs on the islands unlawful, and punishes the offense.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman will allow me, in the course of this bill I notice it makes it a crime for any person to willfully disturb a bird on the Government reservation. I presume there are thoroughfares in the reserve, and if a man is walking or driving along a thoroughfare and a bird happens to be in the road, what is he to do?

Mr. LACEY. The islands are all marshy islands; nobody lives on them. They are public lands.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does anybody ever go there?

Mr. LACEY. They go there to get the birds' eggs and rob the nests or for hunting purposes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No inhabitants on the islands?

Mr. LACEY. No; unoccupied tide-water islands or marsh lands.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But this will operate for all time to come, and——

Mr. LACEY. I hope so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If there should be any settlement there, any thoroughfare—if a man meets, as I say, a bird in the road, what is he to do?

Mr. LACEY. And the bird bites him? [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Indiana is borrowing trouble. There are a few islands that have been used immemorially for the propagation of bird life. Now, this subject used to be treated somewhat jocularly, but the scarcity of our disappearing bird life has brought the subject to the attention of the public in such a way as to cause the matter to be treated more seriously. Now, a few islands that are especially adapted to this use have been withdrawn from public settlement, and we want to protect them from marauders.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would ask the gentleman if it would not make the law operate better if the word "unnecessarily" were put in there after the word "willfully." It seems to me that looks like a rather arbitrary thing.

Mr. PALMER. But when is it necessary to disturb a bird? [Laughter.]

Mr. COUSINS. That would make it so that you could only kill it in self-defense. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any such amendment is necessary. It prevents the willful disturbance of or injury to the birds breeding in these reserves, and nothing else.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not expect to go there, so that I shall not insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' ADDITIONAL HOMESTEAD RIGHTS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 983) to validate certain certificates of soldiers' additional homestead rights, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the certificates of soldiers' additional homestead right, under section 2306, Revised Statutes of the United States, issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in May, 1896, under authority of the act of Congress of August 18, 1894, to M. J. Wine, assignee of Thomas O. George, Moses Roley, Andrew A. Harrison, William Bohanan, Leland L. Betterton, James R. Blades, John Pendleton, Charles M. Blair, Elbert S. Wittenberg, William D. Reynolds, John M. Walker, and Caleb Sill, be, and the same are hereby, made valid.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill validates about twelve soldiers' additional homestead rights. The Department of the Interior first held that those rights were not assignable, and after so holding allowed the parties who had assigned the rights to locate them in their own names and dispose of the property after location, thus cutting out the rights of the assignees. The assignees had attempted to protect themselves by filing in the Department the proper evidence of the assignment. Subsequently it was determined that these rights were assignable, and the parties having the rights, who had bought them and paid for them, ask now to be permitted to exercise their rights, notwithstanding the fact that they have been denied them by previous ruling and the rights have been allowed to be exercised by the original claimants.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is in the interests of the old soldier?

Mr. LACEY. The old soldier did not treat his assignee quite right. He got the money from his assignee and sold his right, and then afterwards exercised it himself. Now, since it has been held that these rights are assignable the Department recognized in these twelve cases that they should be permitted to exercise the right.

Mr. MANN. Who are these people—who gets the benefit of this act? Are they speculators?

Mr. LACEY. Purchasers of the various claims. We call them speculators. They have undoubtedly bought them and hope to make something out of them. They have paid their money for them, and have been deprived of the right of locating them upon the lands by reason of an erroneous ruling which has been subsequently reversed.

Mr. MANN. It is known who they are?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; their names are mentioned in the bill.

Mr. MANN. The soldiers have exercised this right once?

Mr. LACEY. First they assigned their rights for value, and when they were held unassignable went and exercised that right themselves, and afterwards it being determined that they were assignable the parties who had bought and paid for the rights and who have been deprived of locating them under this erroneous ruling ask the privilege now to make the locations.

Mr. MANN. The soldiers had the right and they sold that right to speculators.

Mr. LACEY. The soldiers had this right. All soldiers prior to 1874 who had a homestead of less than 160 acres had the right to go and locate enough to make up the 160 acres somewhere else, and get title to it, or sell that right to somebody else.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by all soldiers prior to 1874?

Mr. LACEY. The law was repealed in 1874, so that no soldiers excepting those who had taken less than 160 acres of land prior to 1874 are entitled to the benefits of what is known as "soldiers' additional" rights.

Mr. MANN. So that the soldier, prior to 1874, having the right to locate, sold that right to a speculator?

Mr. LACEY. No; having the right to locate and having located less than 160 acres of land, he sold his right to the surplus to a speculator or anybody else.

Mr. MANN. Sold to a speculator the right to locate the surplus, and then the Department ruled he could not make the sale?

Mr. LACEY. It ruled it was not assignable.

Mr. MANN. Then the soldier went ahead and made his location and this bill is to relieve the speculator now. You do not grant the soldier himself that right now?

Mr. LACEY. This only applies to a valid right which had been transferred under a valid law for value and which the Department, by making this rule, had prevented from being exercised.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman will pardon me, if the soldier sold a valid right under a valid law, we can not prevent him from exercising that right, and you are seeking to confirm a right here which is not valid because of its invalidity.

Mr. LACEY. He has been prevented from exercising the right, and the injustice of the matter has been referred to the Department, and they recommend the passage of the bill so that justice might be done to these parties by reason of an erroneous ruling.

Mr. MANN. The Department recommend, as they do everything of that kind, to put everybody on an equality; but I think we are entitled to an explanation of why, having given to a soldier prior to 1874 a right which we do not give to a soldier at all now, in addition to that we should give that right twice to the soldier which we do not give at all to any other soldier.

Mr. LACEY. No; that soldier has, by an erroneous ruling, been permitted to exercise a right he did not own, that he had sold and transferred to somebody else and got money for it.

Mr. MANN. Every speculator takes chances when he buys something on speculation.

Mr. LACEY. The speculator took his assignment and filed it and made it of record in the Department, and the Department then went on and aided the soldier in taking land somewhere else by accepting his filing, and thus deprived him of his right of location. Now, that injustice has been done, and the man—you may call him a speculator, as you please; any man who buys real estate might be called a speculator; he might be a homesteader——

Mr. MANN. Then the speculator has a valid claim against the soldier?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Why not? He sold something that he could not deliver.

Mr. LACEY. He sold something he could not and did not deliver, namely, the right to make a location, just like selling a land warrant, and the Department subsequently held that notwithstanding that he had sold it he could not——

Mr. MANN. The Department held he could not sell it?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; and the Supreme Court held the Department was wrong. That is all there is to it, and now having so held they propose to allow these men to exercise that right which they have been denied and which the Supreme Court says they have.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me if they have a claim against the Government they ought to present it through the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LACEY. It is not a claim, it is a right to locate land just like a land warrant.

Mr. MANN. If they have any right there, why should they come here and ask Congress to give them a right? We can not take away a right.

Mr. LACEY. Let me explain to the gentleman. Here is a right given to a soldier to enter an additional 80 acres of land. He has the right now to enter 80 acres of land, providing he made his original homestead location prior to 1874. At that time the law was repealed and any soldier since that time taking less than a hundred and sixty acres can not have this additional right. There are probably 10,000 acres of those rights still in existence unlocated.

Mr. MANN. What are they worth?

Mr. LACEY. These particular ones were held unlocatable, because they were deemed unassignable, and the soldiers took the land and kept the money that they got for the rights which they had sold and assigned. The Land Department had thus deprived the assignee of the right to take the land. The Supreme Court says that the right was assignable. Now, in view of this situation, when the Department comes to adjust the location for John Smith, we will say, of a certain regiment, they find they had already allowed an entry for that same man. The entry is erroneous, but can not now be set aside. So that it requires special legislation to permit the assignees to make the locations, of which they have been thus deprived.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. POWERS. If I understand the statement of the gentleman, the soldiers have located and obtained this residue of land from the Government after selling the right to locate, so that if it is granted again the Government parts with the land twice?

Mr. LACEY. No; they have given these soldiers land that did not belong to them, and they propose to give to these other men the land that does belong to them.

Mr. POWERS. They part with the same amount of land twice?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly. Just the same as if I owe the gentleman a hundred dollars and he assigns the right to somebody else, and gives me notice of it; and then I pay it to him after it has been assigned to the other man. After it has been assigned, the other man can make me pay it again. I pay it twice, but only once to the right person.

Mr. POWERS. One more question. Does the gentleman contend that the purchaser—call him a speculator, if you will—of this right has no remedy against the person to whom he sold? Will not the soldier by taking this land hold it in trust for the person to whom he sold it, or is he not liable to that person?

Mr. LACEY. I think he would be a trustee.

Mr. POWERS. So do I.

Mr. LACEY. But he has attended to that. He has sold the land. He is beyond the reach of the courts.

Mr. POWERS. Then, is he not liable for the amount?

Mr. LACEY. Probably, as a trustee, for the amount. That may be.

Mr. POWERS. Is he not liable, then, for the amount? Then why should they come in here and ask the United States to grant the land a second time if the party—the speculator who bought it—has a remedy against the soldier who has received the assignment by compelling a conveyance, or by suing at law if he has parted with the land.

Mr. LACEY. For this reason: If anyone has obtained something that belongs to somebody else, there are two remedies. One is to go on and exercise the real rights that he has and the other is to treat the wrongdoer as a trustee. He is not compelled to that; he is not compelled to follow the insolvent trustee when he has a valid claim to land. When he has recorded his assignment in the proper office and given notice of it, he is not compelled, because the Department has given this land to the wrong man, to follow the wrong man. He may follow him, if he wants to, but he is not compelled to do that. It would be unjust to compel it in a case like this, because the parties are insolvent.

Mr. POWERS. Is there any evidence to that effect?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] permit a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it is true that he has a right of entry, why the need of this legislation?

Mr. LACEY. The Department has held that inasmuch as on the face of the record they have already allowed an entry for an individual of that name, and have even wrongfully allowed it, that the subject has been exhausted, and they have to ask Congress to give them an opportunity to allow a second entry in order to correct the error that they made before. In short, they have given the wrong man the land. They want now to give the right man the land. I have no doubt that the Government could go into the court and cancel the entry made to the other party, but, after land has passed into the hands of innocent transferees that would be an injustice on the part of the Government which they would not be disposed to commit.

Mr. SHERLEY. The meat of this is that if the soldier has been guilty of fraud and has made a transfer, and instead of abiding by it has himself gotten possession of the land, the United States Government must come in and make whole the man he has defrauded?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. The soldier has a right, we will say, to 80 acres of land. Suppose he has a land warrant for that amount. He sells that warrant and transfers it. The man to whom he transfers it files it in the Land Department and makes a record of it, and shows the assignment in the Department. Subsequently, by mistake of the Government, they allow the assignor to take the same amount of land again. That sometimes has occurred where a duplicate land warrant is issued.

But in this case the right has been transferred, and they have given a person land who had no right to it and have denied his bona fide assignee the land; and by reason of the condition of the records it becomes necessary to have Congressional authority to clear up the record in these twelve cases and to allow the man whom the courts have determined to be the rightful owner to obtain his land.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if I understand you, I find this is in this shape: That the Land Office, having made a mistake, instead of correcting it by canceling the wrong land grant made to the soldier who had assigned his claim, now wants Congress to remedy its mistake by granting land turned over to one soldier to another man in the service.

Mr. LACEY. Why, certainly not. The party does not want to go into a court of equity to cancel twelve different entries in order to do justice to the parties in these claims.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. As I understand, this does not cut off the right of the parties for the amount they hold.

Mr. LACEY. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. As I understand it, if I owed you an account and you assigned it, and I, knowing of the assignment, use that for the sole purpose of not paying you, this case is in the state of what would be the claim that I would not pay it to the man who had the claim—that he ought to follow you.

Mr. LACEY. That seems to be the suggestion; but it was worse than that, because this instrument is negotiable. The assignor has the right to the land itself, and under the same rights as a deed to the land itself, and it is so held by the court.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. It is not true that the assignment of these instruments carries with them no guaranty or warranty title, but only amounts to a quitclaim title.

Mr. LACEY. The deed carries all the rights that the assignor had.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. It is simply a quitclaim deed.

Mr. LACEY. It is a deed of conveyance without a warranty. He is not compelled to file it on the particular land his assignor had selected, but is allowed to select some other public land. Now, some may not want to select land in Colorado, others in California, and if so the right will be taken from them unless they could make their own selections on the public domain.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many acres are involved in this?

Mr. McCARTHY. One thousand and forty acres.

Mr. GOULDEN. This is simply to perfect the title?

Mr. LACEY. Whenever they make a selection then the title would pass.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do they make it under the homestead law?

Mr. LACEY. They make it under the soldier's additional homestead law, which would be without regard to residence.

Mr. MANN. They can locate on land anywhere?

Mr. LACEY. Anywhere.

Mr. HINSHAW. It would not require residence for the time they did not serve?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. This soldier's additional homestead law, I think, was a bad law, and I think it was well to repeal it.

Mr. HINSHAW. It would show that the assignees have acted in good faith and paid their money.

Mr. LACEY. That is true.

Mr. MANN. What was the decision of the Supreme Court holding that the Department was wrong in the decision that it made with reference to those lands?

Mr. LACEY. Webster v. Luther, reported in 163 United States, which is referred to in this report.

Mr. MANN. What was the date of that decision?

Mr. LACEY. I am not sure about the date. It is in 163 United States, probably seven or eight years ago. I call for a vote.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINING LAWS IN ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. I now call up the bill H. R. 8984.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8984) to amend the laws governing labor or improvements upon mining claims in Alaska.

Be it enacted, etc., That during each year and until patent has been issued therefor, at least $75 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made on, or for the benefit or development of, in accordance with existing law, each mining claim in the district of Alaska heretofore or hereafter located, and in addition thereto the locator or owner of each such claim shall perform $25 worth of work upon highways, roads, or trails within the recording division or district in which such claim shall be situate, or, in lieu of such work upon highways, roads, or trails, the sum of $25 may be paid to the recorder for such division or district, who shall give a receipt therefor and enter such payment upon a record of affidavit of annual work done on mining claims; and in case work of the value aforesaid shall be performed upon such highways, roads, or trails as aforesaid the affidavit of the locator or owner of such claim, or of some other person having knowledge of the facts, showing the performance thereof and specifying the highway, road, or trail and the character and extent of such work done thereon, shall be made and filed with said recorder and be recorded by him in his said record, and such affidavit when so made and filed shall be prima facie evidence of the performance of such work. And in like manner the locator or owner of such claim shall also make and file with the said recorder an affidavit showing the performance of labor or making of improvements to the amount of $75 as aforesaid and specifying the character and extent of such work, and such affidavit shall be prima facie evidence of the performance of such work or making of such improvements. And upon failure of the locator or owner of any such claim to comply with the provisions of this act, or any of them, such claim shall become forfeited and open to location by others as if no location of the same had ever been made. The affidavits required hereby may be made before any officer authorized to administer oaths, and the provisions of section 5392 of the Revised Statutes are hereby extended to such affidavits.

SEC. 2. That the recorders for the several divisions or districts of Alaska shall each give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury may require and in such form as the Attorney-General may approve, and shall account to the Secretary of the Treasury for all moneys received by them under the provisions of this act; and all such moneys shall, under the direction and control of the road commissioners of Alaska, be expended within the mining district where collected in the opening and improvement of highways, roads, and trails of Alaska.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 18 on page 2, after the termination of the word "improvements," strike out the period and insert a comma, also the following words: "but if such affidavit be not filed within the time fixed by this act, the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant to establish the performance of such annual work and improvements."

Further amend by striking out, after the word "act," in line 19, page 2, "or any of them" and inserting in lieu thereof "as to performance of work and improvements."

Also, after the word "affidavits," in line 25, on page 2, insert the following: "Said affidavits shall be filed not later than thirty days after the close of the year in which such work is performed."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question or two.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The general law requires that anywhere else, outside of this jurisdiction for which you are legislating, the locator of a claim shall do a hundred dollars' worth of work a year, does it not?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is it you are driving at about this?

Mr. LACEY. I will explain.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish you would.

Mr. LACEY. This bill still requires a hundred dollars' worth of work to be done, but requires that $25 of it shall be done on roads or trails. That provision was inserted with the idea of trying to get a little better means of transportation in Alaska, by permitting a portion of the annual assessment work to be done on roads or trails. The amount of work is not changed, but it may be put in on a trail anywhere, selected by the locater.

There is, however, another provision in the bill to which I will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think I am opposed to this, but if you pass this law, is it not inevitable that the miners out in Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, and in all the rough country, the miners generally in the mountainous country, will be here demanding identically the same kind of a law?

Mr. LACEY. I think not, because the miners in Colorado would a little rather do the work on their own claims than on the roads. This simply requires the miner to take $25 worth of the work that he would in many respects throw away on his claim and put it on the roads. Now, the miners of Colorado would prefer not to do that, because their claims are lode claims, and the $25 worth of work, if they were required to put it in on the road, would be that much subtracted from the actual improvement of their own claims. However, in Alaska, where the claims are placer, the most of this $100 worth of work is practically thrown away. It fills up the next season. They dig a hole and it fills up again, and it is more evidence of good faith than it is actual improvement of the claim. So that the amount of work is still the same in this bill as it is under existing law, but $25 of it goes in on the highways or trails.

There is this further peculiar situation in Alaska: The mining laws of the United States authorize the various States and Territories to make local laws on the subject, not inconsistent with the national laws, and every mining State and Territory in the Union has so far enacted some law requiring the filing of proof with the recorder as to the annual assessment work done, and this bill practically makes the same rule in Alaska that now exists in Nevada, Arizona, and the other mineral States, where proofs are required to be filed within thirty days after the end of the year of the fact of the work having been done. Now, there being no legislature in Alaska, they have not enacted this needful local law.

These two propositions are all that are involved in this bill: First, that $25 of the $100 worth of work shall be done on the roads; and, second, the filing of proof of the fact of the doing of the work with the recorder of the district.

Mr. Speaker, if there is no other question, I call for a vote on the amendments and on the bill.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the various bills reported by the Committee on the Public Lands to-day were passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I was called to the door at the time that the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman was called, and I came back too late to call up a couple of bills unanimously reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I ask unanimous consent to return to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to the call of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what bills the gentleman desires to call up.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have two small bills unanimously reported by the committee. One relates to the inspection of foreign ships and the other relates to dredges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The latter bill is the one I have in mind.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will call up the other bill first.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not object if the gentleman from Ohio wishes to call up the bill for the inspection of steamboats.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me to go back to the call now, I will withdraw the other bill if the gentleman makes any objection to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill that I may have some objection to is the bill relating to dredges.

Mr. GROSVENOR: Very well, then, let me pass the other bill. You will hardly take advantage of my being accidentally called to the door, and in that way prevent my going back to the call of my committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well; I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INSPECTION OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13398) to amend section 4400 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the inspection of steam vessels.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4400 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4400. All steam vessels navigating any waters of the United States which are common highways of commerce or open to general or competitive navigation, excepting public vessels of the United States, vessels of other countries, and boats propelled in whole or in part by steam for navigating canals, shall be subject to the provisions of this title.

"And all foreign private steam vessels carrying passengers from any port of the United States to any other place or country shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4488, 4489, 4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500 of this title, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officer, in any of the ports of the United States, respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid: Provided, however, That when such foreign passenger steamers belong to countries having inspection laws approximating those of the United States, and have unexpired certificates of inspection issued by the proper authorities in the respective countries to which they belong, they shall be subject to no other inspection than necessary to satisfy the local inspectors that the condition of the vessel, her boilers, and life-saving equipments are as stated in the current certificate of inspection; but no such certificate of inspection shall be accepted as evidence of lawful inspection except when presented by steam vessels of other countries which have by their laws accorded to the steam vessels of the United States visiting such countries the same privilege accorded herein to the steam vessels of such countries visiting the United States; it being further provided that there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States the same fees for the inspection of foreign passenger steamers carrying passengers from the United States that any foreign nation shall charge the merchant vessels of the United States trading to the ports of such nationality; it being further provided that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have the power to waive at any time the collection of such fees upon due notice of the proper authorities of any country concerned that the collection of fees for the inspection of American steam merchant vessels has been discontinued.

"It is further provided that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, permit any foreign passenger steamer coming within the provisions of this act whose foreign certificate of inspection shall have expired at sea since last leaving the country to which said vessel belongs, or while said vessel shall have been in a port of the United States, to sail upon her regular route without undergoing any further inspection than would have been required had said foreign certificate of inspection been in force: Provided, however, That such discretion shall be exercised only with respect of vessels operated upon regularly established lines, and in cases where such foreign passenger steamers will be regularly inspected by the authorities of her home government before her next return to a port of the United States."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House exactly what this bill provides. As the law now stands, no ship is allowed to clear from an American port unless it has a certificate of inspection from an American inspector; and, if a foreign ship, she must have a certificate of her inspection still alive, as you might say, touching her capacity and fitness as a passenger and freight ship.

Now, it has come about that some foreign ships have found themselves with their inspection certificate terminated by lapse of time, either while on the voyage here or while lying in an American port waiting for her cargo or for her day of sailing. Thereupon she finds herself under our statute refused a clearance because she carries no certificate of inspection.

Now, this bill provides, and it is the only change in the law, that if that ship belongs to a country that recognizes our inspection in her ports, she may have a clearance from our ports to return to her home port without a live certificate of inspection, until she can renew that under the law of her own construction. With the single exception, that so far as her equipment as to safety and various matters that relate directly to her fitness for the home voyage, she must be examined and certified to by a special inspector in our home port. This law applies only to ships, as I have said, bearing the flag of some country that extends the same reciprocal relation to American ships.

That is the simple proposition. The bill is recommended by the Bureau of Navigation of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and has a unanimous report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FOREIGN-BUILT DREDGES.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a foreign-built dredge shall not, under penalty of forfeiture, engage in dredging in the United States unless documented as a vessel of the United States.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, was read:

In line 5, after the word "States," insert the following:
"Provided, That if any foreign-built dredge is now at work under contract in the waters of the United States nothing herein contained shall prevent the use of such dredge or dredges in the completion of such contract."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] desires to oppose this bill, I will make a brief statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the gentleman would explain it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The bill provides that foreign-built dredges shall not, under penalty of forfeiture, engage in dredging in the United States unless documented as a vessel of the United States. That is the bill as it passed the House last year. It failed of passage by the Senate for want of time. It passed the House, I think, in the latter end of the session.

Now, it was introduced at the time to prevent the coming into this country of foreign-built dredges. Dredges require a large expenditure of money and labor in their building, and it was believed that they ought to be put under the same law and same regulations that apply to our merchant marine in general.

The committee had information from gentlemen from New York engaged in the business of manufacturing these dredges that they were building the very highest type of the vessel, and that these dredges came to this country in this way. A contract was let to some foreign organization for the dredging of Galveston Harbor after the great storm, and, without any authority of law, two or more of these dredges came over. It was said that others were coming, and the Bureau of Navigation recommended that they should be put under the same conditions. But the committee this year have seen fit to make a change in favor of the men—the contractors—who have come here in good faith and taken their contracts based upon the idea that there would be no difficulty in bringing their dredges into this country, and so we have provided an amendment which I will read:

Provided, That if any foreign-built dredge is now at work under contract in the waters of the United States, nothing herein contained shall prevent the use of such dredge or dredges in the completion of such contracts.

I think there ought to be no objection to this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The report of the Commissioner of Navigation, which is a part of this report, states that these dredges are the property of an American corporation. How do these dredges under these circumstances fly a foreign flag?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They were built in a foreign country and bear a foreign flag. The fact that an American builds a ship in a foreign country does not change its relation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but does not the corporation or person have to be a citizen of the country whose flag the vessel flies?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; a great many Americans have bought foreign ships and operate foreign ships. There is nothing unusual in that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to know if the amendment to that bill is meant to cover particularly the dredges now engaged in the work at Galveston, Tex.?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Or anywhere else.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that that was the real purpose of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; to exempt them from the operation of the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if this amendment does not exempt them only as to the extent of that particular contract?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will prepare an amendment specifying that they shall thereafter be admitted to American registry, I will consent to its going in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that; but I am asking the gentleman——

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a question that I would not like to decide offhand. The language of the bill is as follows:

Nothing herein contained shall prevent the use of such dredge or dredges in the completion of such contracts.

Now, while that amendment is furnished by the Department, I still think that it is not as specific as the committee would have been willing to grant, and they would be willing that these dredges should be entirely exempted from the operation of the law. They came in here when they were not subject to this provision.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what I had in mind. I, unfortunately, was not present at the meeting of the committee, as the gentleman will recall, when this matter came up, and I suggest to him that he allow this matter to go over until some future time when, I think, we can draft a proper amendment that will safeguard those dredges as they should be safeguarded.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Can the gentleman not do that now, that we have the floor and the right? Can the gentleman not draw that amendment in a moment?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can, if I can get the names of the dredges.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the gentleman does not need the names of the dredges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the gentleman change that amendment to read something like this:

This act shall not apply to any foreign-built dredges now at work under contract in the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, that would be all right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I agree to that amendment—that is, I have no objection to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In place of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] are there any dredges besides those at Galveston?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not that the committee had any knowledge of, and I presume there are not.

Mr. McNARY. There was not any particular reason why the Galveston dredges should be treated any different from any others?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Only this: The owners of those dredges came here and bid on that great contract when there was no obstacle in the way of bringing their own dredges here, and it seems inequitable to put any limitation on them either during or after the fulfillment of their contracts.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to ask whether or not there are any dredges built on the Lakes by Canadians which are used on the Lakes and the North Atlantic seaboard?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; we have plenty of them. We have the very highest type of dredge builders in this country.

Mr. McNARY. Owned by Canadians?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They are owned in New York. There is a company which came forward and showed us that they could build for the same price as good a dredge as these dredges in Galveston. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], my colleague on the committee, will state that, I think.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I think there are but three of those foreign-built dredges now operating in waters of the United States, and we have abundant opportunity and facility for building them at New York City.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a couple of questions for information. What does this rather unusual and remarkable word "documented" mean?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It means registered—an American registry of citizenship, if you please.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know we have gotten so here lately that we make a verb out of almost anything.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri while to us—to himself and myself—it is a rather unusual word, yet it is a word in common use in the matter of shipping.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is what I supposed it meant. Now, there is one other question, Mr. Speaker. Can this language of the bill be construed to shut out foreign dredges operating in the Canal Zone?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not that Zone belong to the United States?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not for any purposes of this character. We have no law requiring a ship that makes its appearance in the Canal Zone to be documented in the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The reason I asked that question is I think it has not been determined yet whether we are going to build the canal ourselves or let it out to contract. Of course, if we build it ourselves, we will do as we please about ships.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If we are going to let it out to contract, I would not be one who would be willing to encumber the bidder by any limitations of our navigation laws.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would not either.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have sent my amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges.

Be it enacted, etc., That a foreign-built dredge shall not, under penalty of forfeiture, engage in dredging in the United States unless documented as a vessel of the United States.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That if any foreign-built dredge is now at work under contract in the waters of the United States, nothing herein contained shall prevent the use of such dredge or dredges in the completion of such contract.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 5, all after the word "that" and insert "This act shall not apply to any foreign-built dredges now at work under contract in the waters of the United States."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the committee should be defeated and the amendment to the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My amendment is in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It leaves two words in the original amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. CURTIS (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee on Indian Affairs be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks that the Committee on Indian Affairs be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIDSON (when the Committee on Railways and Canals was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill H. R. 14396.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BURNETT. For the purpose of raising the question of consideration at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14396) to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal, to define the powers thereof, and to facilitate interstate commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That to facilitate interstate commerce between the Great Lakes and the Ohio and Mississippi rivers Edward J. Lloyd, George A. Kelly, jr., John H. Jones, Henry Buhl, jr., Thomas P. Roberts, William J. East, George W. Stewart, Emil Swensson, Charles A. Fagan, George M. Lehman, James W. Wardrop, Burd S. Patterson, and John E. Shaw, together with such persons as may become associated with them and their successors, are hereby created a body corporate under the name and style of "The Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company," and by that name, style, and title shall have perpetual succession, may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, make and use a common seal, receive and acquire, by purchase or otherwise, real and personal property and rights of property, and may hold, use, lease, sell, mortgage, encumber, charge, pledge, grant, assign, and convey the same, and generally have and exercise all the powers usually granted to and vested in corporations of the United States of America, and especially full powers to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. That the company, in addition to the powers expressed or implied in this act, shall have the right of eminent domain, which shall be exercised as provided in the case of railroad companies organized under the laws, respectively, of the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio.

SEC. 3. That the capital stock of the company shall not exceed $500,000 per mile of canal proposed to be constructed, divided into shares of $100 each, and the bonded and other indebtedness authorized by this act shall not exceed $300,000 per mile proposed to be constructed, so that the sum total of stock issued and debt created shall not exceed $600,000 per mile of canal proposed to be constructed; and the amount of debt created by the issue of bonds shall in no case exceed the amount of stock subscribed for and fully paid in in cash and bona fide expended in the promotion, maintenance, and construction of said canals and works; and in no event shall the stock issued and debt created be in larger amount than may be necessary to construct, equip, maintain, and operate said canals and works pursuant to and in compliance with all the provisions of this act; and said company is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, and the same shall be a first and prior lien to all other claims or demands upon the company, secured by a mortgage upon its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise to be a corporation.

SEC. 4. That no dividends shall be declared or paid whereby the capital of the company shall in any manner be reduced or impaired.

SEC. 5. That the said company may from time to time set aside a portion of its net earnings to be a sinking fund for the redemption of its said bonds or securities, with or without unearned interest, at such times, in such proportion, and in such manner, by allotment or otherwise, as may be determined by the board of directors.

SEC. 6. That as soon as at least $5,000 of stock for every mile of canal proposed to be constructed is subscribed and paid for in cash, the incorporators named herein, or a majority of them, shall call a general meeting of the shareholders, to be held in the city of Pittsburg, Pa., for the purpose of electing a board of directors of said company, consisting of not less than nine of the shareholders, and of transacting any other business that may be done at a shareholders' meeting. At such meeting the shareholders shall decide by a majority vote of those present, either in person or by proxy, the length of the term or terms of the directors, and if the majority decide to elect a portion of their directors for a term or terms longer than one year, it may and shall be legal for such company to divide the directors who are to be chosen into two, three, or four classes, and to elect the first class to serve for the term of one year, and the second, third, and fourth classes to serve for two, three, or four years, respectively; and at all ensuing elections of such company the shareholders shall elect only the number of directors necessary to take the place of those whose terms of office shall then expire, and such directors shall be elected for the longest term for which any class may have been elected as hereinbefore provided; and notice in writing signed by or on behalf of the incorporators, or a majority of them, fixing the date and place of holding the same, mailed, postage prepaid, to the post-office address of each shareholder not less than ten days previous to the calling of such meeting, shall be deemed sufficient notice of such meeting.

SEC. 7. That the directors of said company, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, shall hold office until their successors shall have been elected and qualified. They shall elect a president, secretary, and treasurer, and may provide for such other officers and employees as may be deemed advisable, and to make by-laws for the control and management of the works, property, and business of the said company.

SEC. 8. That the main office of the company shall be at the city of Pittsburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, and the annual meeting of the shareholders shall be held on the third Tuesday of January in each year.

SEC. 9. That the said company shall be subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the same as if it were a railroad corporation, and shall make such sworn statements and reports as may be required by the said Commission.

SEC. 10. That the company is hereby empowered to lay out, construct, maintain, and operate a canal from some point on the Ohio River, between Beaver, Pa., and Pittsburg, Pa.; thence by the way of the Ohio, Beaver, and Mahoning rivers in the State of Pennsylvania, and the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio, to a point at or near Niles, Ohio; thence northwardly through the State of Ohio to the most accessible harbor on Lake Erie, between the Pennsylvania and Ohio State line and the mouth of the Grand River, in the State of Ohio, including said river, also a branch canal from the mouth of the Shenango River, in the State of Pennsylvania; thence along the Shenango River to a point at or near Sharon, Pa.; also a branch canal from a point at or near Warren, Ohio; the said main canal connecting the Ohio River and Lake Erie to be of such dimensions as to make and construct navigable channels of at least 12 feet in depth and having a standard cross section of not less than 1,800 square feet of area; construct, maintain, and operate all such locks, dams, towpaths, basins, tunnels, aqueducts, feeders to supply water from any lakes, rivers, streams, or water courses, reservoirs, cuttings, apparatus, appliances, and machinery as may be necessary for the construction and operation of said canals; and such locks on such main canals shall not be less than 340 feet long between quoins, 45 feet wide between lock walls, and 12 feet depth of water over miter sills, and between the Ohio River and Lake Erie the total lockage shall not exceed 600 feet.

SEC. 11. That the said company, in the exercise of its right of eminent domain as granted in section 2 of this act, may enter upon and take such lands as are necessary and proper for the making, maintaining, and operating of the canals and other works of the company hereby authorized, and it shall have the authority to alter any and all highways, railroads, and other works, either public or private, necessary for the making, maintaining, and operating of the canals and other works of the company, and whenever in the making, maintaining, and operating of the canals and other works of the company it shall be necessary to alter any highway, railroad, or other works, either public or private, and the said canal company and the owners of such highway, railroad, or other works can not agree as to the character, method, and terms of such alteration, and there are no laws of the State in which the alteration is proposed applicable thereto, then the same shall be determined by the district court of the United States of the district in which the alteration is proposed, and the district courts of the United States in the district through which the canal herein authorized shall run are hereby clothed with jurisdiction to hear and determine such disputes, under such rules as said courts may prescribe, and to fix the character, method, and terms upon which the alteration shall be made.

SEC. 12. That the said company, in the exercise of its right of eminent domain as granted in section 2 of this act, may obtain, take, and use for the construction and operation of the said canal, from the rivers, lakes, brooks, streams, water courses, ponds, reservoirs, and other sources of water supply, sufficient water for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, operating, and using the said canals and works hereby authorized; control and regulate the flood waters of the Allegheny River above Franklin, Pa., and the Beaver, Mahoning, Grand, Ashtabula, Shenango, and Little Shenango rivers, and Sandy Creek, and the tributaries of said streams, by regulating dams, weirs, reservoirs, and impounding dams, and divert, alter, or impound the waters of any river, lake, brook, stream, and the tributaries of said streams or water courses, when the same is necessary to the making, maintaining, and operating of the said canal and works hereby authorized: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize said company to impair the navigability of any river or stream, or to diminish at any time the water supply of any city, village, or municipality below the reasonable requirements of such city, village, or municipality, or in any manner to pollute the same.

SEC. 13. That the said company may construct, maintain, acquire, operate, and lease, or otherwise dispose of the terminals, docks, harbors, piers, wharves, elevators, warehouses and appurtenances, and telegraph and telephone lines along the said canals that may be necessary or useful in the construction, operation, and maintenance thereof, and may acquire or make any vessel, craft, mechanism, or appliance whatsoever necessary for constructing, maintaining, and operating said canal, and use, lease, or dispose of the same; and develop, acquire, use, and dispose of any motive power whatsoever in connection with or as part of the works herein authorized.

SEC. 14. That the said company may take, use, occupy, and hold, but not alienate, so much of the public beach or beach road, or lands covered with the waters of the rivers, lakes, brooks, streams, water courses, reservoirs, or ponds, on or at which the said canals may start from, traverse, cross, or terminate as may be necessary for the wharves, docks, piers, buildings, or other works of the company, and may also construct such works as may be necessary to improve the navigation of said rivers and to stop the waste of waters therefrom and economize and utilize the same for the uses herein provided for.

SEC. 15. That the company shall prepare and file with the Secretary of War, for his approval, the plans, locations, dimensions, and all necessary particulars of its canals and other works between the Ohio River and Lake Erie, and before such approval the construction thereof shall not be begun; and should any change in said plans be proposed during the progress of construction, such change shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and be by him approved before such change shall be made. Upon notice of the approval of the Secretary of War, the company may forthwith begin the construction of its canals and works, or any part thereof, according to this act.

SEC. 16. That the said company, at its own expense, shall maintain on its works, from sunset to sunrise, during the season of navigation, such lights and signals as may be prescribed by the United States Light-House Board.

SEC. 17. That the said company may demand, take, and recover for its own proper use, for all persons and things of whatsoever description transported upon the said canals and works, or in vessels and craft using the same, such reasonable charges or tolls as may by its by-laws be determined; but all such charges or tolls shall, under similar circumstances, be charged equally to all persons, vessels, and goods under certain classifications to be established by the company; and no rebate, reduction, drawback, or advance of any sort on such charges or tolls shall ever be made directly or indirectly. And the said charges or tolls for the ensuing year shall be fixed, published, and posted on or in every place where they are to be collected, on or before the 15th day of February of each year, and shall not be changed except after thirty days' public notice, which notice shall plainly state the changes proposed to be made in the charges or tolls then in force and the time when the changed charges or tolls will go into effect; and the proposed changes shall be shown by printing new schedules or shall be plainly indicated upon the schedules in force at the time and kept open to public inspection: Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow changes upon less than the notice herein specified or modify the foregoing requirements in respect to publishing and posting of such schedules, either in particular instances or by a general order applicable to special or peculiar circumstances or conditions: And provided further, That all charges or tolls upon commerce within the several States through which said canal as located shall be governed by and subject to the laws of the respective States in which said commerce shall be carried.

SEC. 18. That the canals and other works hereby authorized shall be lawful military and post routes, which the United States may forever use for the transmission of mails, dispatches, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation not exceeding that paid by private parties for the same service.

SEC. 19. That if the construction of the canal or some of the canals hereby authorized shall not have been commenced, and a sum equal to 10 per cent of the capital stock of the company not have been expended thereon within six years after the passage of this act, or if the main canal shall not have been finished within fifteen years after the passage of this act, the franchise herein granted shall cease and be null and void; but in calculating the time aforesaid delays caused by the acts of God or the public enemy shall not be included.

SEC. 20. That the Government of the United States may, at any time after fifty years from the opening of the canal to navigation, upon notice to said company of not less than one year, assume possession, control, and ownership of the said canals and their appurtenances and of all the rights and privileges thereunto belonging, full title to which shall, upon such assumption, be fully vested in the United States, and the United States shall thereupon pay to the said company the value of the same, to be ascertained and fixed by three arbitrators, or a majority of them, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the United States, another by said Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company, and the third by the arbitrators thus selected, and said arbitrators, in fixing the value of the canals and works so acquired by the United States, shall not consider or allow any value for the franchise conferred by this act or for earnings or good will.

SEC. 21. That any person, association, or corporation, municipal or otherwise, which shall suffer any damage or loss to person or property by reason of the construction, operation, or maintenance of the said canal, or any of the works thereof, by reason of the exercise of any of the powers herein conferred or shall have any right of action against said company or its property, shall be entitled to all the rights and remedies therefor allowed by the laws of the State wherein said injury was suffered or loss sustained, or right of action accrued, and any action therefor may be brought in the courts of the State having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 22. That the said company when exercising the right of eminent domain shall proceed under the laws and in the courts of the State where the property sought to be condemned is located.

SEC. 23. That the corporation hereby created shall be subject, in the respective States in which it does business, to all the laws of said States regulating the taxation of foreign corporations.

SEC. 24. That the right to amend, modify, or repeal this act is hereby reserved by Congress.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 12320. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13104. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1905; and

H. R. 12864. An act to provide for the purchase of certain coal claims in the island of Batan in the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 26. Joint resolution providing for the return of certain archives now in possession of the Department of State to the State of North Carolina.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I move that the House do now adjourn.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 24, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DAMS AND POWER STATIONS AT MUSCLE SHOALS, ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the House to the concurrent resolution that passed the House yesterday, covering the Muscle Shoals bill. It reads:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate, etc.

It should be "and of the Vice-President." If there be no objection, the concurrent resolution will be amended as suggested, inserting "the Vice-President" instead of "the President pro tempore." The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

RECLASSIFICATION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS OF ALABAMA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 13194.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13194) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reclassify the public lands of Alabama.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to reclassify the public lands of Alabama, so as to determine which of said lands are in fact agricultural lands and which mineral lands, and to decide which of said lands should be subject to homestead entry, and to that end he is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such expert mineralogist, assayists, and civil engineers as may be necessary to designate and survey said mineral and agricultural lands.

SEC. 2. That upon receipt of the report of the parties designated to make such classification, all lands designated thereby as agricultural shall be subject to homestead entry as such.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise expended, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what committee reported this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. It was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. The conditions are these, Mr. Speaker: In 1883 Congress passed a law withdrawing from homestead entry certain lands in Alabama, because it was then supposed that they were valuable as coal lands. Since that time nearly all of these lands have been donated by Congress to the public schools of Alabama, and they have been carefully examined by experts and located. The remaining portion of these lands largely consists of agricultural lands, and this bill simply provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall have an examination made by experts, and wherever the lands examined show to be nonmineral and more valuable for agricultural purposes, that they may be restored to the public domain and subject to homestead entry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman how much there is of this land?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are in all, Mr. Speaker, so the Secretary of the Interior informs us, about 90,000 acres. Perhaps 15 or 20 per cent of the lands are valuable for coal, and will be so held, no doubt. It is only the agricultural lands that are purely agricultural and of no value at all for minerals that this bill seeks to affect at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SURPLUS AND ALLOTTED LANDS ON THE YAKIMA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10067.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10067) authorizing the disposition of surplus and allotted lands on the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, which can be irrigated under the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act," and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That if within the limits of the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, as described in the act approved December 21, 1904, entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," there shall be found surplus or unallotted lands under irrigation projects deemed practicable under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the "reclamation act," the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to exclude from the provisions of said act of December 21, 1904, such surplus or unallotted lands which can be irrigated under such project and to dispose of the same in the manner hereinafter provided, and he is further authorized to make withdrawals of such lands for the purposes provided in said reclamation act.

SEC. 2. That the irrigable surplus and unallotted lands in any such project shall be subject to homestead entry under all the provisions of the reclamation act at such time as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and at a price determined by appraisal as provided in said act of December 21, 1904. Payments for the land shall be made in annual installments, the number and time of beginning being fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and credited to the Yakima Indian fund, and disposed of as provided by section 4 of the said act of December 21, 1904. Such payments shall be in addition to the charges for construction and maintenance of the irrigation system made payable into the reclamation fund by the provisions of the reclamation act. In case of failure to make any payment for such lands when due the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to cancel the entry and the corresponding water right and declare forfeited to the said Yakima Indian fund and the reclamation fund, respectively, the amounts paid on such entry and water right. The lands embraced within such canceled entry shall be subject to further entry under the reclamation act at the appraised value until otherwise directed by the President, who may by proclamation, as provided by said act of December 21, 1904, from time to time fix such price as he may deem most advantageous upon all lands within such projects not disposed of.

SEC. 3. That if any lands heretofore allotted or patented to Indians shall be found irrigable under any project the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, upon the request or with the consent of such allottee or patentee, to dispose of all land in excess of 20 acres in each case, in tracts of an area approved by him and subject to all the provisions of the reclamation act to any person qualified to purchase water rights under the provisions of the reclamation act at a price satisfactory to the allottee or patentee and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, or at public sale to the highest bidder. The payments shall be made in annual installments, the number and terms being approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Such payments shall be in addition to the charges for construction and maintenance of the irrigation system made payable into the reclamation fund by the provisions of the reclamation act. In case of failure to make any payment for such lands when due the Secretary of the Interior shall have power to cancel the entry and the corresponding water right and again sell the land and water right in the manner hereinbefore provided. The proceeds of such resale, after deducting all expenses, shall be divided into two amounts, as deemed proper by the Secretary of the Interior, one to be credited to the reclamation fund and the other to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to be credited to and disposed of for the benefit of the Indian allottee and patentee as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 4. That from the payments received from the sale of such individual Indian lands there shall be covered into the reclamation fund the amounts fixed by the Secretary of the Interior as the annual charges on account of the land retained by such Indian for the construction and maintenance of the irrigation system as required under the reclamation act. The balance, if any, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the individual Indian, and may be paid to any of them if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, such payments will tend to improve the condition and advance the progress of said Indians, but not otherwise.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cover into the reclamation fund from the money of any such Indian, either from his individual credit or from the general Yakima Indian fund, for the payment of charges for construction and maintenance for the water rights appurtenant to the lands retained by him or for the annual maintenance charges payable on account of such water rights after the construction charge thereon has been paid in full. After unconditional title in fee has passed from the United States for any lands retained by such Indians, the water for irrigating such lands shall be furnished under the same conditions in all respects as for other lands under the project.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized, upon compliance with the provisions of this act and of the reclamation act, by any party having purchased such allotted or patented lands as herein provided, to issue patent passing unconditional title in fee by the United States as trustee for the allottee or patentee, and shall cancel any allotment as to the lands disposed of under this act.

SEC. 7. That the irrigation works heretofore constructed for the Yakima Indian Reservation shall be included in any project developed under the provisions of this act, and shall become a part of said project for all purposes of the reclamation act, and the cost of same shall be included in the cost of such project and be paid into the Yakima Indian fund out of the proceeds arising from the sale of water rights. The provisions of this act shall be construed as superseding or amending any provisions of the said act of December 21, 1904, so far as any conflict may appear.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Add to section 5 the following provisos: "Provided, That any Indian taking advantage of this act shall have a perpetual water right so long as the maintenance charges are paid, whether he uses the water or not, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use the funds of the tribe to pay such maintenance charges which in his discretion it is necessary to preserve said water right: Provided further, That he may, in his discretion, use said funds to pay for water rights and the maintenance charges on 20 acres of any Indian allotment if the sum obtained from the sale of the allottee's land in excess of 20 acres and his interest in the tribal funds be insufficient for those purposes."

Amend section 7, in line 22, after the word "rights," by adding the words "from time to time, as payments on account thereof are received."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from what committee this bill is reported?

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to have this bill considered by the House until I have some opportunity of conferring with members of the Committee on Arid Lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I assure the gentleman, if I can have a few minutes, I can explain the bill to his satisfaction.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the gentleman can satisfy me as to a bill involving so much as this does with a simple explanation, without opportunity to consider the bill fully.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not believe the gentleman will object after he hears my explanation of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman is only wasting the time of the House. I can not take in a bill like that myself and understand it, nor do I think other Members of the House can, and I am unwilling to consent to its consideration and passage until I have further opportunity to consider it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If I can not explain it in a few minutes to the gentleman's satisfaction, I am perfectly willing that he should make his objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I suggest to the gentleman from New York that this comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which is the only committee that can handle it, and there will be no conflict as to the jurisdiction of committees.

Mr. PAYNE. I will have to object to the consideration of this bill, but the gentleman seems to want to make a speech, and I have no objection to his doing so, but I will have to object to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like the gentleman to withhold his objection until I can make an explanation.

Mr. PAYNE. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in 1904 we passed a bill to provide for the opening of the Yakima Indian Reservation, and providing for the disposition of the surplus lands. A great deal of this land is arid and desert land. The Secretary of the Interior has found that a considerable amount of it can be irrigated, under a project which he has conditionally approved under the reclamation act. One of the conditions he imposes is that provision shall be made by which such of the Indian lands as can be irrigated shall get water under this reclamation project. This bill has been prepared to meet this condition, has been submitted to his legal officers and carefully examined by them, and simply does this: It provides that if there are any unallotted lands that can be irrigated by any irrigation project, then the Secretary may dispose of them under the reclamation act, providing for their disposition under the homestead law, the person who takes them up under the homestead law to pay, in addition to the cost of the reclamation, as required by the reclamation act, the appraised value of the land under the act of 1904. That is with reference to the unallotted land.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the bill make any charge on the Treasury?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not a dollar.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It simply takes the funds of the Indians to irrigate these lands and then adds the extra cost to the land, and the purchaser pays it when he buys the land?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does not necessarily take any of the money of the Indians. It provides that the man who buys these lands from the Indians, or takes them, must pay the cost of the reclamation in addition to the appraised value. Under the act of 1904 there was no provision of that kind. Then it refers to the allotted land, and provides that any allottee or patentee—and every Indian on that reservation, every man, woman, and child, has 80 acres—may receive the benefit of this irrigation project in this way. (I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will pay close attention to this.) The Government can not deal with each individual Indian. This bill simply authorizes the Secretary, with the consent of the allottee or at his request, to dispose of 60 acres of the Indian's land to persons qualified to take lands under the terms of the reclamation act. In other words, the man who buys the 60 acres then goes to the reclamation act, just like any other homesteader on the public domain, and pays the cost of the reclamation.

Now, here is the real point about it. It authorizes the Secretary, out of the proceeds of the sale of the 60 acres, to purchase for the other 20 acres of the Indians a water right under the reclamation act. It thus places the land of the Indians in a position where they can acquire water rights for the 20 acres and dispose at good advantage the other 60 to those who will farm and reclaim it. That is all there is to the bill. It has been very carefully gone over by the law officers of the Reclamation Service, very carefully gone over by the law officers of the Indian Office, by the Assistant Attorney-General, by the Secretary of the Interior, and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is a very important matter for the Indians, because they can not get water in any other way for these lands.

Mr. CURTIS. It only applies to Indian lands. Is that not so?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion, the necessity for legislation is that this water in the Yakima River may be disposed of to other parties above there and the Indians, unless they are brought under the reclamation act, will not have the benefit of the water that will accrue.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is absolutely true. In fact, every bit of the water of the river at the low stage has been diverted now, and unless the Indian lands can be brought under this storage system they can not get a drop of water and all this land will lie absolutely idle. This bill entails no expense on the Government. It affects only Indian lands and is, in effect, for the sole benefit of the Indians. Their lands are now desert and unproductive. This is a means, and the only means, by which they can ever secure water, and there should be no objection to the bill, and I know there will be none by anyone knowing the aims and purpose of it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman says convinces me that the very able committee of this House on the irrigation of arid lands ought to examine this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not see why. It clearly belonged to the Indian Committee and does not affect the public lands or the terms of the reclamation act. I know the members of the Irrigation Committee will not oppose it.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, if the committee can not do this collectively I want the opinion of the individual members of that committee who are familiar with this subject. The bill relates more to the reclamation of arid lands than it does to Indian affairs, and I want to get the judgment of the members of the Committee on Irrigation with reference to the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It relates absolutely——

Mr. PAYNE. Therefore I shall object, much as I regret to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

PUBLICITY OF RECORDS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R.

14968) to amend the internal-revenue laws so as to provide for publicity of its records.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 3 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and hereby is, amended in section 3240, so as to read:

"SEC. 3240. Each collector of internal revenue shall, under regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, place and keep conspicuously in his office, for public inspection, an alphabetical list of the names of all persons who shall have paid special taxes within his district, and shall state thereon the time, place, and business for which such special taxes have been paid, and upon application of any person he shall furnish a certified copy thereof, as of a public record, for which a fee of $1 for each 100 words or fraction thereof in the copy or copies so requested may be charged."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes now the various internal-revenue collectors throughout the country are required to post in their offices an alphabetical list of the names of the parties who pay a tax as retail liquor dealers. Under a rule that has been issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, through the commissioner of internal revenue, these various collectors are forbidden to give any information to the State courts when parties are being prosecuted in State courts for violation of the liquor laws of the State. They are required, under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to go into the State courts in answer to subpœnas duces tecum, and respectfully decline to give any information whatever on the subject, and to decline to give copies of those records.

Now, this bill makes an amendment to the Revised Statutes and provides that in addition to posting these alphabetical lists of the parties who have paid the internal-revenue tax the collector shall certify a list—that is, give a certified copy of the list he is required to post to any person who will pay the fee which the bill provides—of $1.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill provides that the certified list may be evidenced in a prosecution of any person in the State courts?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It does not make that provision. I think Congress would have no authority to declare what would be and what would not be evidence in a State court.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand that, but I wanted to know if there was any provision in the bill of that nature.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Mississippi will pardon me, I want to say that this bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means after hearing a large number of witnesses. Under existing law the collector of internal revenue is compelled to have in his office publicly displayed the names and places of residences of parties who have paid special tax. Under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury the collector of internal revenue is prohibited from testifying upon that subject at all. This bill removes the prohibition of the Secretary of the Treasury and permits the collector of internal revenue to furnish upon request certified copies of the list which the law provides he shall keep in his office. It is a good bill and, in my judgment, ought to pass.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the purpose of this bill—and if I am not right the gentleman will correct me—is to make a matter of evidence in the local courts the fact that the person accused under the liquor laws has taken out a license from the Government in order to create a presumption that he is violating the liquor law.

Mr. DALZELL. The purpose of the bill is to remove the prohibition that arises out of the Treasury regulations and which prevents a person from getting the testimony that he ought to have.

Mr. MANN. The Government issues a license——

Mr. DALZELL. No; it does not issue a license.

Mr. MANN. We call it a license. The Government calls it a special tax, but we call it a license. Now, you want to change the law so that the issuing of that paper shall be used in evidence against the person in the local courts, and this question arises if that is not the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. It is to furnish evidence to the party entitled to have it, against which there is this regulation.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of the bill is to call the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as a witness against a person who has taken out a license in order to prove that he is violating the liquor law.

Mr. DALZELL. The purpose of the bill is not to call the collector of internal revenue at all, but to relieve him of the necessity of being called. The purpose of the bill is to provide that he may furnish a copy of that which the act of Congress prescribes that he shall keep.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing, whether he is called personally or by giving a certified copy—it makes no difference. What I want to get at is the gentleman's opinion. Now, the people in prohibition districts are compelled to take out a Government license. If this bill passes, will not the result be that these illicit dealers in liquor will then cease not only to get a local license, but cease to take out a Government license, and then the Government will be asked to go in and do the police duty of the States—each one of the prohibition States and Territories?

Mr. DALZELL. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think that is the case, Mr. Speaker, and I have no doubt that if this bill becomes a law in a very short time the National Government will be engaged in police work in all of the prohibition States and some of the prohibition districts—and I have the honor to represent a prohibition district in this House—and that the National Government will be called upon to do that police work in these districts, because it is perfectly self-evident that the man engaged in the illicit sale of liquor will not take out a Government license which will convict him on the first trial. The result will be that he will not have any license at all. Then the internal-revenue officers will be put upon the work of doing the police work, which ought to be done by the States. Yet, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding this——

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman allow me a moment? The gentleman persists in calling this a license. It is not a license at all. It is a special tax. There is a notice on the face of it——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. DALZELL. To the effect that it gives no authority to make sales. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that it can not be pleaded in bar in a prosecution of a party for a legal sale of liquor.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly familiar with the law on that subject. Everybody in the House is.

Mr. DALZELL. This simply makes available that which the act of Congress has already prescribed shall be published, and it seems to me that the question as to whether or not a party will take out and pay a Government tax or not cuts a very small figure in comparison with the justice of the case. The party prosecuting a violator of the law is entitled to have the evidence.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] if this bill was not in response to a large demand from the different parts of the country to meet what is called the so-called "blind tiger" evil, or illicit sale of liquor practiced in prohibition districts, and that, even if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct, that this will result in "cooperation," as he terms it, does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think it right and proper?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Alabama that this whole subject was thoroughly and exhaustively examined by a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means. A great deal of testimony was taken on the subject, and the committee was unanimous in its report, and the whole committee was unanimous upon the report being made in favor of recommending this bill. It seems to me it is only just and right that we should pass such a bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the law contemplate what we are now trying to say the law is, and which has been abrogated very largely by a rule which we are trying to destroy?

Mr. DALZELL. I think the law contemplates that parties in possession of information on any subject ought to be liable to be subpœnaed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the rule of the Department abrogates that, and this bill seeks to wipe out that rule.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] permit me to make a statement before he concludes?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Allow me to make this statement: I want to say this, in response to the suggestion that this is an effort to have the Federal Government enforce the police laws of the States, that it is nothing of the sort. It is an effort to prevent the Federal Government from interfering, as it now does, with the enforcement of the police laws of the State by the several States themselves. The rule which the Secretary of the Treasury has annulled, through the order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which forbids the internal-revenue collectors from giving evidence in State courts and from giving copies of their records, applies to every other official in this country from the President of the United States down.

There is not an officer in this Government, not excepting the President, who is not subject to the processes of the court, and a subpœna duces tecum can go against the President of the United States and against any other officer in this Government. Now, there are two answers that can be made to a subpœna duces tecum, and two only, and our courts have passed on this in numerous cases, and they are—first, that the officer may reply that it will be a matter of such inconvenience that it will seriously interfere with the proper discharge of his duties to leave his office and carry with him his records, that it would hamper him in the discharge of his public duties, and that he can not, therefore, go into court, and our courts hold that under such circumstances he may then give a certified copy of the records asked for and that that is a sufficient response to the subpœna.

He can, on the other hand report, as the President has done in numerous cases, that the matter sought to be made public ought not to be made public; that it is a Government secret and should not be made public in an answer to the process of the courts. They are the only reasons recognized by the rules of law that any officer can ever give for a failure to respond to this subpœna. Now, in this case we provide that the collector shall furnish only a copy, so it will never be necessary for him to leave his office or carry the records out of his office. That disposes of the first objection. The other objection is disposed of by the statute itself, which requires now that this list be posted in his office containing the name of every man who pays the tax and the place where he intends to do business, etc., so that it is no secret whatever. The rule now prohibits the collector from giving the information that he would have to give and which the courts decided he would have to give, and instructs him now that he can not go into court and testify. In other words, it puts him in a class by himself and gives him——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. I would like to ask the gentleman to tell me, for the sake of information, under what law the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to make any such regulation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Well, that matter was decided by our courts. He has the right to make the rules and regulations and prescribe the manner in which his office shall be conducted.

Mr. PALMER. Can he alter the rules of testimony in your State?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. He has done it, and the court has sustained it in the case of Boske v. Comingore (177 U. S.) and in the Lamberton case (124 Fed. Rep.).

Mr. MANN. What good will it be to have this certified copy in evidence?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It will do whatever good the State legislatures see fit to make of it.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The purpose is to let the collector testify, or require him to testify, exactly as every other man in the United States is required.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of having this certified copy?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is that he will give it to the authorities in the States that they may use it, just as they may use any other testimony that they have.

Mr. MANN. That is for the purpose of making a conviction of the accused. Is not that the purpose of it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the accused is guilty of violating the State laws, and this man is called on as a witness to testify to a particular fact, then, if that fact will result in his conviction, it ought to be known.

Mr. MANN. The purpose is to convict a man of having committed the offense?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The purpose is to get testimony the State ought to have.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois asked what effect that will have upon our State law. The passage of this national law will give the people the right to know who desire to sell liquor and have paid their taxes to the Government. Now, under the law of Texas, the tax receipt would be prima facie evidence of the fact that he is engaged in the liquor business. It also gives to the officers the information as to who were engaged in the business or who probably will engage in it. Publicity as to their names would save a great deal of expense in our State government and assist in preventing crime, and if the bill provides only that we can acquire knowledge of the men engaged in the liquor traffic it will assist in enforcing local option when in force and in carrying on our local self-government, and that, too, without the National Government interfering in the least with our local affairs. This is a good provision, and I hope the gentleman will not object, but will let the bill come up for consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Let me state to the gentleman from Illinois the President of the United States, in his last message, called on Congress to amend the revenue laws of the Government to enable the law to be enforced in the Indian Territory, for instance, against the unlawful sale of liquor—bootlegging, as he calls it. The President thought it of sufficient importance to direct the attention of Congress to it in his message.

What is the condition? It is anomalous. The President here is calling upon Congress to pass laws to help to enforce the laws against the sale of liquor in the Indian Territory. The internal-revenue collectors have issued these tax receipts—we call them internal-revenue licenses—for retail liquor dealers and retail dealers in malt liquors—160 of them in the Indian Territory. Now, the President is calling for Congress to amend the laws so that we can bring these men to justice, while the internal-revenue collector sits back and says: "I will not testify against them. I have the proof on them, but I won't let you have it." I think it is scandalous.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a couple of minutes by unanimous consent. Reserving the right to object, I will say that I have no doubt that the purposes of this bill are intended to be good, and I quite sympathize with the gentleman who desires to have the bill pass. But the effect of the bill, in my judgment, will be that, instead of receiving from the internal-revenue collector a certified copy of a license issued, there will be no license issued. There will be no application for a license, because no man who is engaged in the illicit selling of liquor will deliberately and openly give evidence upon which he can be convicted. We all understand perfectly well that these people are engaged in an illegal and illicit business, and that it will be much easier for them to refuse to give evidence against themselves and take the chances against the General Government that they now take against the State government than to take out a license, which insures conviction under the existing law or under law which may be passed. Now, the result will be that these licenses will not be taken out, and the General Government will be called upon to do police duty in these States. I at least congratulate my friends from the South, who have always advocated State rights, in now coming to Congress and appealing to the General Government to do police duty in their own States. Nobody else has ever gone that far.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does not the gentleman think that would break up the business?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

YELLOWSTONE FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 13673, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States be, and the same are hereby, extended to and over the surveyed lands in townships 48, 49, and 50, and ranges 105 and 106, within the Yellowstone Forest Reserve, and the said lands shall be subject to entry ninety days after the passage of this act, within which ninety-day period the Secretary of Agriculture may set aside such portions of said lands as were not occupied by a bona fide settler January 1, 1906, not to exceed 160 acres, as may be necessary for forest reserve administrative purposes, which lands so set aside shall not be subject to settlement entry or location during the life of the forest reserve: Provided, That the commutation clause of the homestead laws shall not apply to the said lands, and any bona fide settler who made settlement on said lands prior to January 1, 1906, and who had prior to that time lost or exercised his homestead right, may enter and perfect title to the lands settled upon by him as though his homestead right had not been lost or exercised.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

In line 12, page 1, after the word "exceeding," insert the words "in the aggregate."

At the end of line 7, page 2, strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "upon the payment of the sum of $1.25 per acre for the land included in his entry at the time of making final proof;" and that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming whether or not these are Indian lands?

Mr. MONDELL. They are not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does it come, then, that they are not under the general homestead law?

Mr. MONDELL. The lands affected by this legislation constitute about 8,000 acres formerly subject to all the public land laws; but by reason of the creation of a forest reserve over the lands they were withdrawn from all forms of entry. A survey was had to designate and indicate the agricultural lands in the valley of the Shoshone River. We now propose to restore these agricultural lands thus surveyed to entry under the homestead law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the Secretary of the Interior in favor of it?

Mr. MONDELL. The Secretary of Agriculture—yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is under his Department?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. Are these lands in the valley covered by forests?

Mr. MONDELL. They are not. They are agricultural lands.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that when we open these forest reserves all up, and the land adjacent to them, and they come to be occupied as homesteads, we will have another bill in here for the Appalachian Forest Reserve, the Green Mountain Forest Reserve, and the Yellowstone Mountain Forest Reserve, and an opportunity to spend the surplus and other current revenues of the Government to buy out these same gentlemen going in there.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, how that can possibly occur. I believe it is a proper policy on the part of the General Government to open to homestead entry all lands within forest reserves purely agricultural in their character. Such is the desire of the Forestry Service. In this case, in order that there could be no question as to the character of the lands opened to homestead entry, a survey was made by the Land Office of the land strictly agricultural in a certain valley; and thereupon it is proposed to restore these lands to homestead entry. I will say to the gentleman that a considerable proportion of them are already occupied by homesteaders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERMS OF COURT AT VICTORIA, TEX.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12863.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12863) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide terms of court at Victoria, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Bee, Calhoun, Dewitt, Goliad, Jackson, Live Oak, Refugio, and Victoria shall constitute a division of the southern judicial district of Texas.

SEC. 2. That terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of Texas shall be held twice in each year at the city of Victoria, in Victoria County, and that, until otherwise provided by law, the judges of said courts shall fix the times at which said courts shall be held at Victoria, of which they shall make publication and give due notice.

SEC. 3. That all civil process issued against persons resident in the above-named counties and cognizable before said courts shall be issued out of and made returnable to said courts at Victoria, and that all prosecutions against persons for offenses committed in any of said counties shall be tried in said courts at Victoria: Provided, That no civil or criminal cause begun and pending prior to the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by it.

SEC. 4. That the clerks of said courts of said district shall maintain an office in charge of themselves or a deputy at said city of Victoria, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of business.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of section 4 the following: "Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for holding of said courts at said places, free of expense to the Government of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, does this touch the eastern district of Texas in any way?

Mr. BURGESS. No, sir.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. None of these counties are in the eastern district?

Mr. BURGESS. No, sir.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURGESS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CALUMET RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13365) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Kensington and Eastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River," approved February 7, 1905.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the Kensington and Eastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River," approved February 7, 1905, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved; and this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the 1st day of February, 1906."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPPLIES TO WAR VESSELS.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KAHN. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for consideration in the House, as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 381) to amend section 2982 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to the sale of supplies to vessels of war.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2982 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2982. The privilege of purchasing supplies, duty free, from public warehouses, or bonded manufacturing warehouses, shall be extended, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, to the vessels of war of any nation in ports of the United States which may reciprocate such privileges toward the vessels of war of the United States in its ports."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "duty free;" in line 7, strike out the word "or" and insert after the word "warehouses," "free of duty, and from;" line 8, after the word "warehouses," insert "free of duty or of internal-revenue tax, as the case may be."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSION BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar for consideration to-day may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bills on the Calendar in order for consideration yesterday, but considered to-day, because to-day was substituted for yesterday, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the first bill.

JEROME GOODSELL.

The first pension business was the bill (H. R. 4810) granting an increase of pension to Jerome Goodsell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jerome Goodsell, late of Company D, Sixty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HENRY F. LANDES.

The next pension business was the bill (H. R. 2991) granting a pension to Henry F. Landes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry F. Landes, late of Company H, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I present a letter, in the nature of a petition, from the cotton manufacturers of my State, setting forth reasons why the Philippine tariff bill should be enacted into law. The letter is short, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GRIFFIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Griffin, Ga., February 19, 1906.

Hon. ALEXANDER S. CLAY,
United States Senate, Washington.

DEAR SIR: I see that the general Philippine tariff bill (No. 3) has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending before the United States Senate. As all of the southern cotton manufacturers are vitally interested in the passage of this bill, I write to request you to use your influence and to give its passage your active and vigorous indorsement.

The free entry of southern cotton-mill products in the Philippines would no doubt be beneficial to southern cotton manufacturers, and I see no good reason why the United States should allow England, Spain, and other foreign countries to monopolize this trade. Surely we have expended enough money on these islands to receive some benefit therefrom.

I am also in favor of reciprocity with the Philippines, and do not object to reduction to 25 per cent of the present tariff on sugar, rice, and tobacco. As a matter of fact, sugar is the only item worth considering, as the amount of rice that would be imported from the Philippines would be practically of no importance, and the tobacco that would be imported does not conflict with the tobacco raised in the South.

Trusting that this bill meets with your approval and that you will give it your vigorous support, I am,

Yours, truly, W. J. KINCAID, President.

We, the undersigned cotton-mill officers, of Griffin, Ga., heartily approve of the foregoing letter.

Mr. CLAY presented a petition of Atlanta Division, No. 180, Order of Railway Conductors, of Atlanta, Ga., praying for the passage of the so-called "employers' liability bill" and also the "anti-injunction bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce to report back favorably House bill 12987 as it passed the House of Representatives, it being understood that the members of the committee reserve the right to offer amendments to the bill and vote for the same while it is under consideration in the Senate.

Accompanying the bill, Mr. President, I present the hearings which have been had before the committee at its several sessions during the past year, embracing the volumes on my desk—several thousand pages. The committee thinking that the mass of testimony, much of it irrelevant, might be inconvenient for the Senate, have felt that it was necessary, at least desirable, to employ two experts, Messrs. Newcomb and Adams, who have been instructed, without giving any opinions of their own, to epitomize as far as practicable the evidence presented in the hearings, and also to gather a considerable mass of very valuable information bearing on railway rates both in this country and in Europe.

I send that along with the report of the bill, and ask that it be printed as a document to accompany the bill. The mass of the testimony embraced in these volumes will be subject to the order of the Senate. If the Senate wants to have it printed it will cost a considerable amount of money, although the plates are already in the Printing Office, and nothing but the cost of the paper will be involved in the printing. It will be left for the Senate to determine whether it will want the full hearings printed or not.

Mr. President, as soon as I can gather the data and digest it I will present a written report bearing on this important subject, and presenting the views of those of us who are in favor of this kind of legislation. At present I shall content myself with giving notice that as soon as——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. It is only about the volumes of testimony. I understand they have not been printed for the use of the Senate, but only for the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is all, so far.

Mr. HALE. It is not now, then, in any form a public document?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a public document.

Mr. HALE. And the Senator submits an abstract or epitome of the valuable parts of the testimony, which will be the public document that Senators will consult?

Mr. TILLMAN. Unless Senators want the whole testimony. They might not be willing to take the condensation or epitome, but would prefer to go to the original testimony. That is a matter for the Senate to determine.

Mr. HALE. But whether we shall have, in either one form or the other, a document for the use of the Senate and Congress and the country, depends upon future action?

Mr. TILLMAN. That, of course, will depend upon the order of the Senate. The document I have sent to the desk embraces what is supposed to be, and what it certainly was our desire to have, an epitome and a condensation of the valuable parts of the testimony, with references to the pages in the original testimony.

Mr. HALE. I think it quite likely that we should want to have it all printed, but for the present, at any rate, if a Senator wants the document he can not get it, because it has only been printed for the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. No Senator can get this document, because there are none in existence, but I will state that the printed matter has been stereotyped and the plates are at the Printing Office.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose simply to call attention to the fact the Senator has just now adverted to, that the plates are still preserved, and that to print further copies of the hearings would involve nothing more than the cost of the paper. Therefore, if it is to be of any value at all, it seems to me there ought not to be any question about printing the hearings as a Senate document for the use of the Senate. There was a larger number printed by the order of the committee than is usual for mere committee use, but not enough to answer the purposes of the Senate. As the subject is one which is likely to be very much discussed and in which the country is very greatly interested, I suggest to the Senator it would be entirely proper for him, in connection with the report he is now making, to ask that the hearings be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Ohio substantially said what I intended to say. As I understand it, in this excerpt prepared by the two experts they have, of course, taken what they considered to be the important parts of the testimony, according to their judgment. But I am quite sure that when Senators undertake to examine the digest they will also want to examine the whole testimony. I hope the Senator will now, in connection with his report, ask that not only the excerpt, but that the testimony shall be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. How many copies would the Senator suggest—10,000?

Mr. ALLISON. The usual number. Let the question of extra copies be considered later.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say to the Senator I am sure, from my own experience in responding to requests for the testimony, that a very large number will be asked for, and while I, of course, am willing to be guided by the great experience and wisdom of my friend from Iowa, I would think that the ordinary number of only a few hundred would be exhausted almost before it was off the press.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then I would suggest to the Senator that he ask that five or ten thousand copies be printed in connection with the digest of the testimony prepared by the experts.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that as a part of the printing legislation there is a rule providing that any printing which cost over $500 shall be first submitted to the Committee on Printing and a report be made; but I think it has been ruled by the Chair in a previous Congress that while that applies generally to documents it does not apply to reports of committees and papers accompanying the report. I ask the Chair to state his construction of that rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule does not apply, as the Chair is advised, to reports and documents accompanying reports.

Mr. HALE. That has been my understanding.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I ask that 10,000 copies of the digest——

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him before he puts the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. I will state for the information of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senate that after the conclusion of the hearings, by order of the committee, 3,000 sets were printed for the House and the Senate for distribution as they might see fit and by the committee itself. I thought it was proper for the Senate to be informed of this fact before making an order as to the number that shall be printed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to say as to the set referred to by the Senator from West Virginia, I do not think it was complete. Moreover, the number has not been sufficient. There is demand already for it, and I am sure the Senator from South Carolina will desire to give us all that we need.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to ask that 10,000 copies of the evidence and also of the abstract or epitome be printed, because there is a good deal of entirely new material in the abstract that is not in the evidence. I ask that 10,000 copies of the two be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina reports from the Committee on Interstate Commerce a bill which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. The Senator from South Carolina asks that 10,000 copies of the testimony taken by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in support of the bill just reported and 10,000 copies of the digest of the hearings upon the same subject be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. President, only a word more. I stated a moment ago that as soon as I shall be able to gather the material and digest it for making a written report, I will submit such a report, certainly within the next two weeks.

In the meantime I desire to serve notice that in view of the transcendent importance of this legislation and the wide and universal interest in Congress doing something, I shall take occasion, as soon as the statehood bill is disposed of, and probably before, if it should hang on the hook too long, to ask the Senate to take up this bill and consider it and press it to a vote just as soon as we can get one.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, a majority of the Republican members of the committee did not join in the favorable report which has just been made by the Senator from South Carolina for the reason that, in their judgment, an attempt should have been made by the committee to remedy, by proper amendments, some of the obvious and admitted defects and omissions of the House bill, and that clear and adequate provision should have been made for subjecting the orders of the Commission affecting rates to judicial review. They believed that these amendments were not only necessary to protect the rights of all the parties in interest, but that they were essential to the vitality and efficiency of the measure. With these amendments the minority members, with the possible exception of the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. FORAKER. With the actual exception.

Mr. ALDRICH. With the actual exception of the Senator from Ohio, who is opposed, as I understand, to all Government rate making, were ready to give their support to the House bill.

I beg to assure the Senator in charge of the bill that the opponents of the measure in its present form will ask for no unnecessary delays in its consideration. The legislation proposed is of such a character that the most careful examination of its provisions and the fullest discussion of its terms will be necessary. But beyond this no attempt will be made to prolong the debate.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, some of the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee could not give their consent to vote to report the bill just as it was reported by the Senator from South Carolina, without amendment, and they will submit a report giving their reasons therefor, and their views of the bill which has now been reported.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: The Senator from South Carolina, in making a favorable report of what is known as the "rate bill," suggested, as I understood him, that that report was made with a reservation that the majority of the committee joining in it will offer such amendments in the Senate as hereafter they may see proper.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is not entirely accurate. The entire committee passed that rule. All the members of the committee, not only those who reported the bill but the others, reserved the right to offer amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. Mr. President, the entire committee reserved the right to offer such amendments to the bill as they may think fit hereafter. I take it, therefore, that in a large degree this is no more nor less than a transfer of this controversy from the committee to the Senate Chamber.

I therefore offer a substitute for the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator withhold it until the order of the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is reached? We are now on the order of reports of standing and select committees.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the Senator ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well. I will simply complete the sentence, which is that I offer a substitute for the entire bill, moving to strike out all after the enacting clause. The substitute I offer is in effect and substance the bill which I have heretofore introduced in the Senate upon this general subject. I ask that I may offer the substitute now out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be received now. The Senator from Texas submits a proposed substitute for House bill 12987. It will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN subsequently said: I am advised by the Chair that, as the extra cost of printing the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee, and the printing of the prepared digest, will each exceed the cost of $500, he is of the opinion that it will be necessary to introduce concurrent resolutions, and that they shall be referred to the Committee on Printing. I have had prepared for the purpose and now introduce two resolutions.

The concurrent resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the testimony taken by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rate bill," 3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 extra copies of the digest, prepared under the direction of the committee, of the testimony taken by the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the consideration of the so-called "railroad rate bill"—3,000 for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, it was Ordered, That 500 copies of Senate Document No. 143, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk, embodying my own views of what will be proper amendments to the present interstate-commerce law and also the limitations of the authority which, in my mind, should be placed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table. I desire to give notice at this time that I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to address myself to this particular subject in the near future.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, should be so amended as to provide:

1. That the provisions of said act shall be so extended as to cover and include all rates and charges for transfer or switching and apply to all terminal or other facilities for receiving, handling, and shipping goods, wares, and merchandise, and shall prohibit any and all unjust charges or discrimination in legislation thereto.

2. That if it be established that any railroad company has granted or paid, directly or indirectly, by or through any means or device whatever, any rebate or preference to any shipper, that both such railroad and said shipper shall be adjudged to pay a fine of three times the amount of such rebate or the value of such preference granted or received, in addition to any other fine or penalty now provided in said act.

3. That all refrigerator cars or cold-storage cars or other cars, whether owned by any railway company or by any other person or corporation, used in interstate commerce, shall be covered by the provisions of said act.

4. That all charges paid by any railroad company for use or rental of any such cars shall be just and reasonable to the end that the owner of such cars, using the same for shipment of his own goods, shall secure no unfair or unjust benefit over any other shipper of like goods; and all unjust and unreasonable charges by the owners of such cars for the use or rental thereof to any railway company, or for use, or rental thereof by any other shippers or for icing or other service in connection with the use thereof, shall be prohibited.

5. That on and after January 1, 1909, every railroad company doing an interstate-commerce business shall furnish all cars, whether refrigerator, cold storage, or other specially constructed or designed cars for the carriage of special merchandise, necessary for the conduct of its business as a common carrier, and shall furnish at just and reasonable rates all icing and other service necessary or proper for the protection of any goods in transit; and on and after such date no such railroad company shall enter into any contract with the owner or shipper of any goods to ship the same in the cars of such owner or shipper or pay any rental for such cars.

6. That all discrimination in rates or service between persons shipping from one point to another point shall be strictly prohibited; but such provision shall not prevent any railroad company from making such special rates to or from any locality as it may deem necessary for the development of such locality, or enterprise therein, as may seem to be for the interest of such locality, business, or the railroad serving the same.

7. That the said Interstate Commerce Commission shall be prohibited from making any rules or regulations or adjusting any rates, the result of which shall in any respect prevent or discourage free and full competition between the several carrying lines of the country.

8. That such Interstate Commerce Commission shall make no rule or regulation having for its object the distribution of the carrying or transportation business of the country between any particular carrying lines or between any particular cities; but that all such carrying business or transportation of goods shall be allowed to go to such road or roads, or through such city or cities, as shall be able under free and unfettered competition to secure the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On February 23:

S. R. 28. Joint resolution to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

On February 24:

S. 2106. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Van Buren, Ark.; and

S. 3318. An act to allow the entry and clearance of vessels at San Luis Obispo, Port Harford, and Monterey, Cal.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES OF INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the morning business is closed.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to renew the request which I made on Thursday last for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5976) to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of that bill until the conclusion of the morning hour at 2 o'clock, but I shall object to that or any other bill, except the unfinished business, being considered after 2 o'clock.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and to anyone else who might be disposed to object to the consideration of the bill, that the existing tribal relations of the Five Civilized Tribes will terminate on Sunday next, and unless some legislation is enacted their affairs will be left in a very uncertain condition. More than that, there is a very large land grant depending, in the opinion of many members of the committee, upon the action of Congress between now and then making disposition of the land which will not go under the terms of that grant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, pending that request I desire to say that it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] can pass this bill by 2 o'clock, on account of some very objectionable provisions in the original bill and still more objectionable amendments reported by the committee; but if the Senator wants to prevent the dissolution of the tribal relations—and that may or may not be important—he can easily pass within fifteen minutes enough of the bill to continue the tribal relations.

The Senator has in this bill some amendments which will overrule the decisions of the courts and the opinions of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department, which I feel it my duty to resist.

The Senator also has in this bill an elaborate provision for the disposition of the coal lands in the Indian Territory, and I shall feel it my duty to propose such amendments as will render it impossible for the railroads traversing that Territory to acquire those coal lands.

I might add that there is a provision in the bill for the exercise, by certain public-service corporations, of important franchises, but there is no provision that they take these rights subject to future repeal, amendment, or alteration. I think that an amendment of that kind, reserving to the future State the power to control them, is of great importance. While I think these things will require somewhat extended consideration of the Senate, I shall not myself object to the consideration of the bill; but if the Senator deems it of vital importance to continue the tribal relations beyond the time now set for their termination the easy and simple way would be the best way.

Mr. HALE. Let me say there that the Senator in charge of this bill would find himself in great trouble upon the other side. Some Senators have very strong objections to this bill because it does continue the tribal relations. I should not consent that the bill be taken up upon any proposition that that feature of the bill shall be agreed to by the Senate. So the Senator from Texas and I in that regard have entirely distinct and opposing views.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that there is a consequence involved in the tribal dissolution that would appeal to him against opposition on that point. I believe that if this tribal relation is dissolved and the title to the lands reverts to the Government of the United States there will be an enormous grant of lands to the railroads passing through that Territory, which will deplete the assets of the Indian tribes by millions of dollars, and surely the Senator from Maine would not insist upon the present dissolution of the tribal relations when he understands that the effect would be that the lands, which would otherwise provide a school fund for the children of that present Territory, soon to become a State, will go as a gift to the railroads.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall unanimous consent be given for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HALE. That, Mr. President, I shall not agree to at present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], that my objection to the consideration of the bill beyond the hour of 2 o'clock was not predicated on anything that is in the bill. I have never read the bill, and I do not know what the bill does, for I am not on any of the committees that have had the matter under consideration. My objection was simply because the unfinished business will come up at 2 o'clock, and I did not want it displaced; on the contrary, I want it proceeded with.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have no special knowledge of the details of this bill, not being a member of the committee that has reported it, and not having given such attention to the subject-matter as I think I do to other matters that my mind particularly dwells upon—for we have to divide these duties—but I have objections to the feature of the bill that the Senator from Texas says can be passed in a few minutes, which are sufficiently strong to prevent my agreeing to any proposition here and now or to any programme that will allow that to be passed. I do not wish to discuss it. If the Senator from Minnesota wants to go on with the entire bill until the regular unfinished business is reached, I have no objection to that; and he can take his chances.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think I can reduce this discussion to one proposition. In view of the opinion of the Attorney-General, so far as I am personally concerned, I will not press the amendment, and there can certainly be no objection if that is not in the bill; and regarding the clause in the bill relating to flowage rights there can be no objection to a provision referring it to future legislation. There will be no particular objection on my part to the reservation of the mineral lands. As to the railroads, the committee felt that was a matter which would more properly come within the purview of the interstate-commerce regulations. There would be no objection, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, to either of those.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the trouble about reserving that question is that this title would revert upon the dissolution of the tribal relation to the Government of the United States. If the Government of the United States parts with the title, it can not afterwards control it; but if the Government couples with its conveyance of title a stipulation that whenever it passes into the ownership of any common carrier it shall revert to the United States, then that condition runs with the land. I want to say, Mr. President, that as much as I object to certain provisions of this bill I would forego those objections rather than see the tribal relations dissolved by the statute that limits it to the 4th of March next, and allow this enormous patrimony of the Indians pass to the railroads without a dollar of value received. I would prefer to see the bill pass as it is amended, though those amendments, in my opinion, are, some of them, indefensible, but the greater consequence of depriving these Indians of their lands overcomes that objection.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is recognized.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask a question.

Mr. LONG. I was only going to ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] a question.

Mr. SPOONER. If I have the floor, I will yield to the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I yield.

Mr. LONG. Has the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] examined section 27 of the bill, providing for the disposition of these lands after the 4th of March next, and that they shall not become public lands or property of the United States, but shall be held in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Indians of the different tribes?

Mr. BAILEY. If the bill passes that will be sufficient, and for that reason I say——

Mr. LONG. Does not the Senator think it will be sufficient without section 28, which extends the tribal governments after the 4th of March next?

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that if the entire bill passes, either section may be sufficient.

Mr. LONG. I am very much opposed to section 28, and do not think it necessary. I think the matter is fully covered by section 27.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, assuming that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] is correct in that, and without further examination I would not venture to assert an opinion, it still requires the passage of this bill containing that section, or else it will require the passage of some law continuing the tribal relations. Either may be sufficient to prevent the result to which I object.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator convinced, if the bill passes with section 27, that section 28, which in terms extends the tribal relation, should be stricken out?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have not examined that closely enough to be certain that I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG], and I would want to be sure on that point before I forego an objection and permit what I may describe as a forfeiture of the Indian lands to the railroads. I think that would be a most undesirable result.

Mr. LONG. Certainly. I fully agree that that would be very undesirable.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Kansas desires to prevent that result, since he is a member of this committee and has no doubt given deliberate and close attention to this matter, I should be disposed to receive his opinion on it.

Mr. HALE. I will say, Mr. President, that I felt greatly reenforced in the objection I made to section 28 by the attitude of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG], who has examined the subject thoroughly, who is a member of the committee, and who, from his situation and location in the neighborhood of these tribes in this Territory, is competent to have a thoroughly intelligent view of the matter, which I acknowledge I have not. I thought there was serious objection to section 28, but I am not prepared to discuss it fully, and the Senator from Kansas is.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not quite certain that section 28 protects the Indians. As I understand it, the state of the title is this: The United States conveyed these lands to the Choctaw tribe of Indians so long as they exist as a tribe and occupy them. Afterwards it was provided in a railroad grant that whenever that tribal title was extinguished the railroad would become entitled to certain lands.

Mr. CLAPP. Not entirely so. The provision was that it should go to the railroad company when the Indian title was extinguished, provided the land should become public lands of the United States. That was the condition in full.

Mr. LONG. Provision was made in that act that the grant should only attach if the land became public land of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was going to suggest a difficulty which presents itself to my mind. The Indians have a determinable or base fee, the Government of the United States have the reversion. Now, can the Government of the United States grant that land to the railroads, we will say, contingent upon a certain event and then defeat its own grant? It is a very serious question whether Congress can, by this kind of an act, lift this land out of its condition of public land, in order to defeat a remainder, which it has granted to the railroads.

It is certain that Congress can continue the tribal relation and thus continue the title of that land in the Indians forever; but, if Congress grants one title to the Indians and another to the railroad, the railroad title becomes a vested remainder, because there was a party in being in whom that remainder could vest upon the termination of the first title. That may present a very serious question.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas whether, in his opinion, if this bill should fail to pass before the 4th day of March next, the law devolves the grant, or the title to the grant, upon the railway companies?

Mr. BAILEY. I think undoubtedly it does.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, if there is any doubt whatever about that, this Senate ought to transact no business during this week until this bill in some form is passed. It would be a national crime if we allow any legislation or any proceeding in this Chamber to intervene to prevent the passage of adequate legislation before the dissolution of the tribal relations of the Five Civilized Tribes. I had a talk yesterday with the Secretary of the Interior—as conscientious, faithful, and devoted a public servant as ever was in the service of this Government; he has as much at heart the conservation of all the public interests within the jurisdiction of his Department as any man I have ever know in the public service—and he deems it of vital consequence that before the 4th day of March next Congress shall have so far disposed of this subject as to render it impossible that there shall be any question as to this alleged remainder in the railway company as to these lands, or any question as to whether they are not safeguarded for all time in the interest of the Indians and their descendants.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question before he sits down?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I was interested in what the Senator said about the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior on the question. I agree with him that the Secretary is a very careful, painstaking, and honorable officer of the Government. Did the Senator learn from his conversation with the Secretary of the Interior whether or not the Secretary of the Interior is for or against the incorporation in this bill of section 28?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not learn from the Secretary of the Interior that he was in favor of extending the tribal relations, and I think section 28 of this bill does that, does it not?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I did learn from the Secretary of the Interior that he was very much opposed to the provision beginning in line 9, on page 19, as follows:

> After said appraisals as aforesaid, but not prior to March 4, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President, may sell, etc.

His theory, as he stated to me, being that that enlarged time was being sought, for an ulterior purpose outside, to be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator from Maine, and I yield the floor entirely.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say a word. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. TELLER. If I have the floor, I will yield; if not, I will sit down.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HALE. In half a minute I will yield the floor, Mr. President. I only wish to say that I have reason to believe—not that we should take it as a rule of action, but it is worth while to consider in investigating—that the Secretary of the Interior is very decidedly and strongly opposed to section 28, believing that its operation will be evil and that it ought not to be in the bill whenever it shall be passed, although he is very strongly in favor of the bill generally. Now, I yield entirely, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I simply want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin as to a statement he made which I did not entirely catch, being in the rear of the Senate Chamber, that a certain provision was inserted in this bill from sinister motives. I should like to ask the Senator to again call attention to the portion of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood from the Secretary of the Interior that he was not in favor of the words "but not prior to March 4, 1907," in the provision and this provision beginning in the ninth line on page 19:

> After said appraisals as aforesaid, but not prior to March 4, 1907, the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the approval of the President, may sell, etc.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand the Senator to say that the Secretary of the Interior had stated that that provision was inserted from sinister motives.

Mr. SPOONER. No; but I got the impression from my talk with the Secretary, which extended over an hour, that he thought that there were inherited motives—not in the committee, of course—for the incorporation of that amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, that that was inserted in the committee and not with reference to any outside influence or statement whatever that had been made.

Mr. SPOONER. The whole matter can be debated. My principal point was to bring the attention of the Senate to the absolute necessity that this bill should not be permitted to go along until the time shall arrive when, by operation of law and the expiration of the treaty, these tribal relations will be dissolved.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state for the information of the Senate that the bill is not before the Senate, and that this debate is still proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may say a few words on the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. This is a House bill. It came to the committee, and a subcommittee on it was appointed, of which I was not a member. They considered this bill for nearly a week. The committee have held hearings upon it, beginning at half past 9 in the morning and continuing until 12 o'clock noon. They have considered and discussed every feature of this bill and a great many things that are not in it. The committee were met, Mr. President, by the fact that on the 4th of March the tribal relations of these Indians ceased by a provision of law. As a lawyer, I have no hesitation in saying that it is in the interest of the Indians and almost a necessity for the proper discharge of the duties of this Government that these tribal relations should be extended at least temporarily. I have no question, Mr. President, that, in the absence of legislation, on the 4th of March next these railroad companies will claim the lands, not, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] says, worth a million or two million dollars, but worth several million dollars.

Mr. President, this bill deals with property belonging to the Indians. There are at least forty or fifty million dollars concerned in this bill, affecting the property the Indians own and its distribution. There are two grants to railroads, extending clear across the Territory, taking thousands and tens of thousands of acres of these lands—coal lands, valuable lands for agriculture, valuable lands for minerals—that, in my judgment, when the tribal relation ceases, if the Government has made no disposition of these lands, will become the property of the railroads. These railroads were not built upon the faith of the railroad companies ultimately becoming the owners of these lands. They would have built the railroads without that provision being put in the act. They are now insisting that they will become entitled, if these lands are not disposed of by the Government, to make claim to lands worth, as I say—and I have not any question of it—instead of $1,000,000, five times that.

Mr. President, what harm can come by the extension of the time for the existence of the tribal relation? It is the sovereignty that holds this title, and when that sovereignty ceases and expires, no man here who is a lawyer need be told that the title must vest somewhere; it can not float; it can not be in the air.

It has been said by some that it went to the Indians. That can not be maintained by any legal argument, by precedents, or upon principle. It vests in the Government. If there was a full sovereign, as a State, I have no question where the title would go; it would vest in the State. The Government of the United States is the sovereign over that land. It vests in the United States, with a moral obligation, I admit, to hold it for the Indians, but with no legal obligation whatever on the part of the Government. The question would immediately arise, Can the Government dispose of an acre of this land that belongs to the railroads under the act passed many years ago? Must not the railroad take this title?

I understand the Senator from Maine has withdrawn his objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. President, I do not believe the twenty-seventh section answers the purpose. I doubt very much whether we can do by indirection what we can not do directly. I am for what is a fair disposition of this land. The title must remain where it is until the title has been put out of them, not by the operation of law, but by a conveyance by the tribe.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I desire to ask the Senator what lands are provided for in section 13. Are they railroad lands?

Mr. TELLER. A part of them will be railroad lands.

Mr. FORAKER. As I understand the bill from hastily glancing at it since this discussion commenced, it would seem that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to protect the interests of everybody by bringing the lands to sale in some form or other.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that there are 450,000 acres of coal lands. One hundred and seven thousand acres of the 450,000 have been leased and are making a return to the tribes of about $275,000 a year by way of royalty.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the debate is proceeding by unanimous consent, but it is amounting to a consideration of the bill. If the bill is before the Senate so that it is open to amendment, I will offer an amendment that will probably circumscribe this question so that we may dispose of it at this time, and I then would not offer any objection. Otherwise I object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator that if the bill comes before the Senate of course it will be open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Perhaps the Senator would accept this proposition.

Mr. TELLER. I have no authority to accept anything.

Mr. HEYBURN. I mean so far as yielding, that the present consideration of the bill may be agreed on.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. For the purpose of bringing the measure properly before the Senate, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. During the morning hour?

Mr. CLAPP. During the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5976) to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the bill be read.

Mr. TELLER. I merely wish to conclude, if the Senator will wait.

Mr. President, these 450,000 acres of coal lands are very valuable property. In my judgment the 450,000 acres are worth away up into the millions of dollars. The committee labored with this question very earnestly for several days, and we eliminated what it was thought would be a provision that would protect the Indians.

Mr. President, I do not like the suggestion which was made here that there was a sinister purpose in limiting the sale to one year. We first proposed in committee that the coal lands should not be sold within the next five years. Why? Because we knew that at this particular time there was not a purchaser for that vast body of coal land except in one single direction. It was as sure to fall into the hands of the railroad companies of the Territory as it was to be sold. It would have been in the interest of the Indians if we had said it should not be sold for the next ten years, and if we would extend the existence of the tribal relations to the next ten years it would be in the interest of the Indians.

I myself made the motion for five years. I made the motion also for one year in committee when I could not satisfy the committee that it ought to be five years. I may not have as much interest in the Indians as the Secretary of the Interior, but I think I have quite as much, and I think I have quite as much knowledge of what is to the interest of the Indians as anyone not connected with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. President, I think it is very important that this bill should be passed and become a law before the 4th of March, and I think it is absolutely essential that the twenty-eighth section shall be kept in, for I do not myself believe that the twenty-seventh section alone will do what will be done if the twenty-eighth section is kept in.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to make clear the legal status of the title of the land, so that Senators may understand it. I do not think we have made it as clear as we might. This land in the Indian Territory, given to all the tribes, has been granted by the Government of the United States to those tribes so long as the tribal relation exists; in other words, so long as the Indians exist as a tribe. The title of the Indian is simply a tribal title, to be divested upon the occurrence of a contingency, that contingency being the dissolution of the tribe itself.

In the meantime the Government has made a grant of this land, giving to a certain railway corporation every odd section for 10 miles on each side, making a grant 20 miles in width on the line of the road. The railway runs right along where the very best coal lands in the Territory are located, so that the company would receive very many of the mineral lands, which are estimated to be worth from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Any Senator can see that the moment the tribal relation terminates the tribal interest in the property ceases, and it must necessarily revert to the Government of the United States.

The railway grant contains a provision that it should take effect on condition that the land became public land of the United States. The title, therefore, can be acquired upon the happening of two contingencies: First, that the tribal relations must cease; second, that the land must become public land of the United States.

Therefore, if we can avoid the second contingency we can prevent the attaching of the title of the railway company to lands of an enormous value. How may this be done? It can be done so long as we continue the tribal relations? It will cease when we discontinue them. But it will discontinue by operation of present law on the 4th day of March, 1906. Therefore we have got to meet that condition. We have either got to continue the tribal relations beyond the 4th of March, 1906, in order to prevent the vesting of the title in the railway company, or else we have got to dispose of the land in some way before that time.

We can not dispose of the land, and dispose of it properly, within that period. It is my belief that there is no method by which we can hold the land, even by a title in trust, that will be so certain and absolute as the continuance of the tribal relations for another year, or for whatever time may be necessary.

Mr. President, that is the object, and the sole object, of the continuance of the tribal relations. There are lands other than the coal lands, other than the grants, which must be disposed of or must be protected in some way for the benefit of the Indians themselves.

This continuation was not proposed for the purpose of allowing anybody to exploit that part of the Territory, but for the sole purpose of protecting the Indians themselves.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] objects to one provision of the bill. What is that provision? I want to be perfectly fair. The provision was first voted in and then it was voted out. Then it was voted in again and voted out; and it was voted in, I think, for about the third or fourth time. I simply call attention to that fact to show to the Senate that the committee itself was very closely divided as to whether the provision should or should not be in the bill.

Now, what is the provision? Under the present laws any white man marrying into the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nation became a member of that tribe, and hence his children would become members of the tribe. In the case of any man or woman marrying into the tribe, contrary to the provisions of the ordinary law of nations where the status of the wife becomes the status of the husband, the status became the status of an Indian. Many white men married into the tribe. The Indian wife—and in most cases the Indian wife might be nine-tenths white—would die and then the white man would marry out of the tribe, or a white woman marrying a white man, and children would be born from the second marriage.

It was the opinion, at least on the last vote, of a majority of the committee that the issue of white parents entirely, who were married outside of the tribe, should not inherit the lands of the tribe. Under the present law they can inherit. There is no question about that. No one will deny that they have the right to inherit. No one will deny, also, that if we do change the law we change the law of inheritance. The majority of the committee felt that we were doing the Indians an injustice unless we provided that the issue of the marriage of white persons, one of whom should be outside of the tribal relations, should not inherit the tribal property. We did that upon the assumption that it was for the interest of the Indians, and we changed the law of descent so that it would not apply to those who absolutely did not have one drop of Indian blood in their veins.

The majority of the committee so decided, but I think the chairman of the committee has agreed that it will not do to jeopardize the vast interests that are concerned in the bill, that it may become a law before the 4th of March, 1906, by having the majority still insist upon that provision, and that we had better yield the amendment rather than have no law upon the subject.

Mr. CLAPP. Further, I will say to the Senator, the Attorney-General has rendered a decision in which he holds, so far as he has authority to do it, that the white children can not inherit.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that is true, then there would be no occasion for that provision. So I hope we may go on and get the bill through, so that we may protect the Indians and continue the tribal relations, because I want to make it clear, if I have not done so already, that the moment the tribe ceases to exist as a tribe, that moment the relation of guardian and ward ceases, and we have no further control over the property of those Indians. They will then be controlled by the new State. Once having let go of our authority by a dissolution of the tribe, we never can regain it, no matter how the conditions may be or how much we ought to regain that authority.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to send to the desk and have read an amendment which I think will go far to settle the present difficulty in regard to the pending bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause down to section 28 and strike out all of section 29.

Mr. HEYBURN. That will leave the bill to provide only for the contingency which faces us. On the 4th of March, by the operation of existing law, certain conditions will arise of themselves. The time between now and the 4th of March is very short in which to consider and determine a bill of this magnitude.

If any amendments are made they must go back to the House and be there considered, or go to a conference committee, etc. There are only six days remaining between now and the time when it is necessary either to continue this tribal relation in the only manner in which it can be continued, and that is by authority of Congress, or else to allow those lands by operation of law to become public lands and be subject to the rights of the railroad company.

I think we ought to be willing to defer the consideration of the other provisions of the bill, no matter how wise they may be. I do not intend at this time to suggest even that they are not wise, but it is quite a sufficient inducement to defer the consideration of them at this time that it should be done in order that there may be no lapse of title which would result in the lands becoming public lands and subject to the contingent grant of the railroad company.

Therefore my amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause down to section 28, leaving section 28 to stand as the only provision of the act. Section 28 provides—

That the tribal relations and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of March, A. D. 1907; and all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

That would be the bill complete. The amendment is to strike out all before and all after that provision, thus safeguarding the rights of the Indians to this land and preventing the attaching of the grant in remainder to the railroad company. Between now and the 4th of March, 1907, there is ample time to consider and determine the remaining provisions of the bill, or even during the present session we may do it; but the time is so short that I do not believe the bill can receive that consideration to which it is entitled, involving as it does the establishment of a new law of inheritance in regard to those Indians and the determination of titles that are in controversy in the courts to-day, and in controversy to such an extent that the very provisions of the bill are involved in the controversy that was decided during the last week in the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit at St. Louis, and which will undoubtedly be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, involving a long delay.

Senators may say that questions in regard to those who are entitled to be registered are not involved. I think they will find upon the consideration of the decision itself that those questions are considered, and it is not possible for us to say what weight that court or the court to which the appeal may go will give those questions.

I think we had better provide here against the contingency, or rather the emergency, which faces us and allow the other provisions of the bill to remain for more deliberate consideration, when we may devote more time to it than there is between now and a week hence.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read for amendment. The amendments of the committee will be considered as they are reached in the reading.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the consideration of the bill to-day, knowing as I do the necessity for its early enactment into law. So I shall not at this time take occasion to reply to the statements made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] in regard to the necessity for retaining section 28 in the bill. Later on, when that section is reached, I shall present my views why that section is not necessary, but that Congress has full and complete authority now over the disposition of the lands and property of these tribes, even without sections 27 or 28 of this bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 6 on page 1.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the word "formal," before the word "application," in line 6, was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; in line 6 strike out the word "formal." It is a mistake in the print. It should have been indicated as an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 6 strike out the word "formal" before the word "application;" so as to read:

That after the approval of this act no person shall be enrolled as a citizen or freedman of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribe of Indians in the Indian Territory, except as herein otherwise provided, unless application for enrollment was made prior to December 1, 1905, and the records in charge of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes shall be conclusive evidence as to the fact of such application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The first reported amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "tribes," to strike out "on or before March 4, 1906" and insert "within ninety days after the date of the order or decision sought to be reconsidered except as to decisions made prior to the passage of this act, in which cases such motion shall be made within ninety days after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 14, after the word "who," to strike out "were" and insert "are;" and in line 15 to strike out the word "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

That for ninety days after approval hereof applications shall be received for enrollment of children who are minors living March 4, 1906, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, after the word "enrolled," to strike out "in" and insert "as members of;" so as to read:

Whose parents have been enrolled as members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, etc.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee

if it was the intention of the committee, for I do not recall what was said about it, to exclude the freedmen of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations from the benefit of the enrollment? I understand that under the treaty they have the same rights to a limited extent as to the number of acres as the Indians. It seems to me that the word "freedmen" should be inserted after "members."

Mr. CLAPP. I will say to the Senator that it was the purpose to limit the provision to the members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee tribes.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave, then, to reserve the amendment for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment in line 16 will be passed over. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, in line 17, before the word "Creek" to insert the word "or," and, after the word "Creek," to strike out the words "or Seminole;" so as to read:

Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, or Creek tribes, or have applications for enrollment pending at the approval hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 3, before the word "months," to strike out "nine" and insert "six;" so as to read:

The provisions of section 9 of the Creek agreement ratified by act approved March 1, 1901, authorizing the use of funds of the Creek tribe for equalizing allotments, are hereby restored and reenacted, and after the expiration of six months from the date of the original selection of an allotment of land in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 6, after the word "tribes," to insert "and after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act as to allotments heretofore made,"

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 11, to strike out "June" and insert "March;" and in the same line to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Provided, That the rolls of the tribes affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after said date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "Provided further," in line 14, to strike out:

That nothing herein shall be construed so as to hereafter permit any person to file an application for enrollment in any tribe where the date for filing application has been fixed by agreement between said tribe and the United States: Provided further, That nothing herein shall apply to the intermarried whites in the Cherokee Nation, whose cases are now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That no child the issue of two white parents, one or both of whom is enrolled or claims enrollment by reason of a prior intermarriage with a member of a tribe, shall be entitled to enrollment or to an allotment of land in any of said tribes; and all applications and enrollments heretofore made or attempted to be made in such a case are hereby declared void and vacated.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that the committee does not insist upon that amendment, and I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I should hope that it may be agreed to unless some members of the committee object to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have the amendment reserved for the present.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I should like to dispose of it, because I am waiting now to attend a conference with some gentlemen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The only delay I want is to examine the opinion which has been rendered by the Attorney-General of the United States, which perhaps modifies or more than modifies the opinion heretofore rendered by the Assistant Attorney-General. It is simply for the purpose of examining that opinion.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that if the opinion of the Attorney-General is what I learn it is, then these intermarried children can not be enrolled even without this amendemnt.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is exactly the purpose for which I want to examine the opinion.

Mr. BAILEY. Therefore it would not be necessary to include the amendment in order to exclude the intermarried children.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the very reason why I desire to examine it. It is a very important amendment, it seems to me. I shall not insist on delaying it, however.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding is that the Senator from Wyoming is in favor of the amendment now.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the Senator can not care particularly for delay, because, if the opinion of the Attorney-General is to the effect which I understand it to be, these children go out under that decision without reference to the amendment. If the opinion of the Attorney-General is not what it is said to be, in view of the fact that the Attorney-General of the United States and the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department and two or three learned and upright judges have all decided that they are entitled to enrollment the Senator from Wyoming would not want to exclude them, I am sure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator rather puts the Senator from Wyoming in a false position. The Senator from Wyoming, if that is the law at the present time, is very desirous of a change of the law by act of Congress in regard to the rule of descent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONG subsequentiy said: I ask for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 5976) to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, the bill that was under consideration this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks for a reprint of House bill 5976. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the bill (H. R. 5976) to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, be reprinted.

Mr. LONG. In connection with the bill I also desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in reference to section 28 of the bill which was under consideration this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP,
Chairman of Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

SIR: I am in receipt of your communication of the 23d instant, submitting for my consideration section 28, H. R. 5976, being the bill to porvide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. Said section reads as follows:

"That the tribal relations and government of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes or nations are hereby continued in full force and effect for all purposes until the 4th day of March, A. D. 1907; and all acts and parts of acts so far as they conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

It has been heretofore provided as to each of these tribes that the tribal government shall not continue longer than March 4, 1906, but in none of these provisions is mention made of "tribal relations." A change in the form of government would not change the character of title by which the tribal property is held. That would remain tribal or communal property, notwithstanding the status of individual members in respect of citizenship in the United States. The authority of Congress over the tribes and their property would remain unaffected. The community would not be dissolved, but would remain intact for all purposes necessary to the final disposition and division of tribal or communal property. It is believed these propositions are sustained by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

That Congress has plenary power to provide for a change in the form of government of these tribes has been declared by the Supreme Court in Stevens v. Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 445), in which the constitutionality of the act of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat., 495), was upheld. It is entirely competent and proper for Congress to provide for administration of the affairs of these tribes after the dissolution of the tribal government.

The property to be administered on is tribal or communal property. No individual has any separable vested interest therein except as division and distribution may be made. This is clearly set forth by the Supreme Court in Stevens v. Cherokee Nation, supra, and again in Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock (187 U. S., 294). In the latter case it was said (p. 307):

"Whatever title the Indians have is in the tribe, and not in the individuals, although held by the tribe for the common use and equal benefit of all the members. (Cherokee Trust Funds, 117 U. S., 288, 308.) The manner in which this land is held is described in Cherokee Nation v. Journeycake (155 U. S., 196, 207), where this court, referring to the treaties and the patent mentioned in the bill of complaint herein, said: 'Under these treaties, and in December, 1838, a patent was issued to the Cherokees for these lands. By that patent whatever of title was conveyed was conveyed to the Cherokees as a nation, and no title was vested in severalty to the Cherokees, or any of them.'"

It should be noted here that each of the tribes holds under a like patent.

In Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, supra, it was further pointed out that citizenship of members does not affect the tribal property or control thereof, it being said:

"There is no question involved in this case as to the taking of property; the authority which it is proposed to exercise by virtue of the act of 1898 has relation merely to the control and development of tribal property which still remains subject to the administrative control of the Government, even though the members of the tribe have been invested with the status of citizenship under recent legislation."

The dissolution of the existing form of tribal government and substitution therefor of government by the Congress through an Executive Department of the United States can not alter the character of the property or change it from a communal holding to individual holdings.

Nor can it in any sense be considered as an abandonment by the tribe of the land held as communal property.

The Indians have come to consider the dissolution of their tribal government March 4, 1906, as inevitable and have been shaping their affairs to that end. This Department has also acted upon that theory, and has been conducting the work of enrollment, allotment, and preparation for final distribution of the tribal property to meet the conditions that will result from such dissolution. To now change the date would inevitably throw this work into confusion, give a new lease of life to the intolerable conditions which made necessary the intervention of Congress in the affairs of these tribes, and work injury to the individual members without any compensating advantage. Dissolution of the tribal governments and vesting in the Secretary of the Interior such powers as may be necessary to the administration of affairs and property of these tribes means simplifying the machinery with consequent lessening of expense and saving of time. Unless, therefore, it be absolutely necessary to protect tribal property no change should be made in respect to the time of dissolution of these governments, and the necessity thereof for that purpose is negated by the decisions of the Supreme Court referred to herein.

The policy adopted in the passage of the act of June 28, 1898, contemplated the dissolution of these tribal governments March 4, 1906, and each step since then, both legislative and executive, has been taken with that in view. All interests have accepted that as a final determination of the matter, and have governed themselves accordingly. Adherence to this policy is necessary to avoid confusion in working out the difficult problems arising in connection with this work. Any backward step at this time or any hesitation would be a serious mistake, entailing much delay and possibly great harm. Believing, as I do, that a firm adherence to the policy heretofore adopted and followed to this time will best protect the interests of the Indians and at the same time avoid the undesirable delay a change would involve, I most earnestly recommend that said section 28 be eliminated.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12707.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] is entitled to the floor upon the unfinished business. Does he yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. DICK. I yield to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida in a few moments. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 381. An act to amend section 2982 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to the sale of supplies to vessels of war, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 395. An act concerning foreign-built dredges;

H. R. 13365. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Kensington and Eastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Calumet River, approved February 7, 1905; and

H. R. 13398. An act to amend section 4400 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the inspection of steam vessels.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

H. R. 8984. An act to amend the laws governing labor or improvements upon mining claims in Alaska; and

H. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution authorizing assignment of pay of teachers and other employees of the bureau of education in Alaska.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 9721. An act to amend section 5481 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

H. R. 12863. An act to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide terms of court at Victoria, and for other purposes.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 13194. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reclassify the public lands of Alabama; and

H. R. 13673. An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws to certain lands in the Yellowstone Forest Reserve.

H. R. 13190. An act to protect birds and their eggs in game and bird preserves, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

H. R. 1565. An act for the relief of Theodore H. Bishop was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RAILROAD DISCRIMINATIONS AND MONOPOLIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 23) instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examinations into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies and report on the same from time to time, which was to amend the joint resolution as follows:

Strike out the preamble and all after the resolving clause and insert the following:

"That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed immediately to inquire, investigate, and report to Congress, or to the President when Congress is not in session, from time to time, as the investigation proceeds:

"First. Whether any common carriers by railroad, subject to the interstate commerce act, or either of them, own or have any interest in, by means of stock ownership in other corporations or otherwise, any of the coal or oil which they or either of them, directly or through other companies which they control or in which they have an interest, carry over their or any of their lines as common carriers, or in any manner own, control, or have any interest in coal lands or properties or oil lands or properties.

"Second. Whether the officers of any of the carrier companies aforesaid, or any of them, or any person or persons charged with the duty of distributing cars or furnishing facilities to shippers, are interested, either directly or indirectly, by means of stock ownership or otherwise, in corporations or companies owning, operating, leasing, or otherwise interested in any coal mines, coal properties, or coal traffic, oil, oil properties, or oil traffic over the railroads with which they or any of them are connected or by which they or any of them are employed.

"Third. Whether there is any contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, in which any common carrier engaged in the transportation of coal or oil is interested, or to which it is a party; and whether any such common carrier monopolizes or attempts to monopolize or combines or conspires with any other carrier, company or companies, person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce in coal or oil or traffic therein among the several States, or with foreign nations, and whether or not, and if so to what extent, such carriers, or any of them, limit or control, directly or indirectly, the output of coal mines or the price of coal and oil fields or the price of oil.

"Fourth. If the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find that the facts, or any of them, set forth in the three paragraphs above do exist, then that it be further required to report as to the effect of such relationship, ownership, or interest in coal or coal properties and coal traffic, or oil, oil properties, or oil traffic aforesaid, or such contracts or combinations in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, or such monopoly or attempt to monopolize or combine or conspire as aforesaid, upon such person or persons as may be engaged independently of any other persons in mining coal or producing oil and shipping the same, or other products, who may desire to so engage, or upon the general public as consumers of such coal or oil.

"Fifth. That said Commission be also required to investigate and report the system of car supply and distribution in effect upon the several railway lines engaged in the transportation of coal or oil as aforesaid, and whether said systems are fair and equitable, and whether the same are carried out fairly and properly; and whether said carriers, or any of them, discriminate against shippers or parties wishing to become shippers over their several lines, either in the matter of distribution of cars or in furnishing facilities or instrumentalities connected with receiving, forwarding, or carrying coal or oil as aforesaid.

"Sixth. That said Commission be also required to report as to what remedy it can suggest to cure the evils above set forth, if they exist.

"Seventh. That said Commission be also required to report any facts or conclusions which it may think pertinent to the general inquiry above set forth.

"Eighth. That said Commission be required to make this investigation at its earliest possible convenience and to furnish the information above required from time to time and as soon as it can be done consistent with the performance of its public duty."

Amend the title so as to read:

"Joint resolution instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examinations into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies in coal and oil and report on the same from time to time."

Mr. TILLMAN. I am authorized by the Committee on Interstate Commerce to move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. As I understand the joint resolution of the House, it it not as broad as the joint resolution passed by the Senate?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is in one sense.

Mr. KEAN. It confines the investigation to coal and oil, while the joint resolution passed by the Senate embraced not only coal, but all other products.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say it is narrowed a little, but it is more specific, and the committee authorized me to move concurrence in the House amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I agree with the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives to the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio yielded to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Ohio has yielded up his time, I can not, of course, object, but I think the Senator should be allowed to go on with his remarks, which were suspended the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As a matter which is in order at this time the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

R. G. CHILDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return to the House of the bill (H. R. 2697) granting an increase of pension to R. G. Childress; and, by unanimous consent, the request was ordered to be complied with.

THE STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. There seems to me objection to the consideration of any other bill now, and I withdraw my request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, this bill (H. R. 12707) provides for the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as one State under the name of Arizona.

AREA OF ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO, AND POPULATION.

New Mexico has an area of 122,460 square miles. Arizona has an area of 112,920, and, combined with New Mexico as one State, will have an area of 235,380 square miles. This area is the land surface. The Territory of New Mexico has a population, as given in the year 1900 by the census, of 195,310 people, and Arizona by the same census contained a total population of 123,000, in round numbers, but of that number some 25,000 were Indians, leaving a net population of the Territory at that time, as given by the census, of some 98,000.

New Mexico at the same time had a population of twelve or thirteen thousand Indians, leaving something over 180,000 as the net American population of that Territory.

RELATIVE SIZE OF NEW STATE OF ARIZONA.

While Arizona and New Mexico combined will make a very large State, in area it will still be smaller than the State of Texas, for five of the smaller Eastern States could be added and it would still have less square miles than the Lone Star State. If we eliminate that portion of the area which is unfit for habitation, the size of the new State would be reduced very materially. The Territorial Delegate in Congress from Arizona said very recently:

TWO HUNDRED MILES OF DESERT MOUNTAIN WASTE.

Two hundred miles of unsettled country lies between the two Territories along the great Continental Divide, and that vast area will remain forever practically unsettled and untenanted, except by the roving followers of flocks of sheep and herds of cattle, and these may never come on account of the scarcity of water and forage in that inhospitable desert mountain waste.[a]

A strip of this size would equal the area of Ohio and Indiana combined, and is by no means all of the area of these Territories which is of that character.

THEY HAVE NOT KEPT PACE IN POPULATION.

The Territories of New Mexico and Arizona have not kept pace in the matter of population, though their civilization is the oldest of any portion of the United States.[b] In the year 1850, when New Mexico first appears in the census returns, that Territory, which then included the present Territory of Arizona, stood thirty-second in order of States and Territories according to population. The present States of Colorado, the two Dakotas, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, Washington, Wyoming, and the Territory of Oklahoma did not then figure in the census returns. New Mexico then had more people than the District of Columbia, Minnesota, and Oregon. At the next Federal census in 1860, although New Mexico had increased her population over 50 per cent, she had dropped to the thirty-fourth position in relative rank. Kansas had come into being and beaten her in the race for population. Minnesota had exceeded her, jumping from 6,000 people to 172,000 people.

LOSS OF RELATIVE RANK EVERY CENSUS.

In the Federal census of 1870 Arizona first appears as a separate entry, with nearly 10,000 people. Taking the population of the two Territories together, they had dropped from the thirty-fourth to the thirty-sixth position in rank, Nebraska having passed them with its increase of from 28,000 people to 123,000 people. West Virginia had been created with a greater population, and even the District of Columbia had gone ahead. At the census of 1880 the joint population of Arizona and New Mexico was thirty-seventh in relative order of rank, Colorado having passed them, with its increase from 40,000 to 194,000 people. Oregon also had forged ahead and Delaware had only in that decade been left behind. In 1890 the joint population of these two Territories had dropped down to the thirty-ninth place in rank. Oklahoma and the Indian Territory had forged ahead, the State of Washington had jumped from 75,000 people to 350,000 people, and although Dakota has been divided into two States, South Dakota had leaped far ahead in the race. By the last Federal census North Dakota had taken the lead, and on joint population New Mexico and Arizona stood only in the forty-first place in order of rank. Oklahoma, though in the Territorial State, had increased from about 62,000 people to almost 400,000. These two Territories along the Mexican border have therefore in the last sixty years failed utterly in keeping pace with the other States and Territories. When it comes to a comparison of agricultural resources and manufactures the comparison is still more unfavorable.

TERRITORIAL STATUS NOT PROHIBITIVE OF GROWTH.

The claim that the Territorial status is prohibitive of growth and that statehood means an immediate boom in population is not borne out by the experience of all the States.

Arkansas was admitted in 1836, and increased in population 112.9 per cent the decade before admission, 221.1 per cent in the decade in which she was admitted, and only 115.1 per cent the decade after.

Colorado was admitted in 1876, and in that decade increased in population 387.5 per cent. How much was acquired before admission and how much afterwards is a matter of speculation. The growth the next decade dropped to 112.1 per cent.

The Dakotas were admitted in 1889. From 1860 to 1870 the Territory of Dakota increased in population 193.2 per cent; from 1870 to 1880, 853.2 per cent; from 1880 to 1890, 278.4 per cent, and in the decade succeeding admission the combined percentage of increase of the two States fell to 87.7 per cent.

Florida was admitted in 1845. The decade before she increased in population 56.9 per cent, in the decade in which she was admitted, 60.5 per cent, and in the succeeding decade, 60.6 per cent.

Idaho was admitted in 1890. In the decade from 1870 to 1880, she increased 117.4 per cent; from 1880 to 1890, 158.8 per cent, and from 1890 to 1900 decreased to 88.6 per cent.

Illinois was admitted in 1818. In that decade she increased 349.5 per cent; in the next decade, 185.2 per cent, and in the succeeding decade, 202.4 per cent.

Indiana was admitted in 1816, in which decade she increased 500.2 per cent, as compared to 334.7 per cent the preceding decade, and then fell back to 133.1 per cent the succeeding decade.

Iowa was admitted in 1846, and increased in that decade 345.8 per cent, as compared to 251.1 per cent for the next decade.

Louisiana was admitted in 1812, and increased in that decade 100.4 per cent, and only 40.6 per cent for the next decade.

Maine was admitted in 1820. Her population increased from 1800 to 1810, 50.7 per cent, from 1810 to 1820, 30.4 per cent, and 1820 to 1830, 33.9 per cent.

Michigan was admitted in 1837. In that decade she increased 570.9 per cent to 255.7 per cent the preceding decade, and only 87.3 per cent the decade after her admission.

Minnesota was admitted in 1858. Her increase in that decade reached the marvelous figure of 2,730.7 per cent, which dropped down the next decade to 155.6 per cent.

Missouri was admitted in 1821. From 1810 to 1820 she increased 219.4 per cent, from 1820 to 1830, 110.9 per cent, from 1830 to 1840—the highest figure reached in her history as a State—173.2 per cent.

Montana was admitted in 1889. From 1880 to 1890 she increased 237.5 per cent and from 1890 to 1900 only 75.2 per cent.

Nebraska was admitted in 1867. In that decade she increased 626.5 per cent, the next decade 267.8 per cent, and from 1880 to 1890, 134.1 per cent.

Oklahoma increased from 1890 to 1900, 518.2 per cent, a figure even she, with all her marvelous possibilities, will likely never again equal, regardless of admission to statehood.

Oregon was admitted in 1859. In that decade she increased 294.7 per cent, and in the next decade 73.3 per cent, and from 1870 to 1880 only 92.2 per cent.

Utah was admitted in 1896. Her population increased from 1850, when she was organized as a Territory, to 1860, 253.9 per cent; from 1860 to 1870, 115.5 per cent; from 1870 to 1880, 65.9 per cent; from 1880 to 1890, 44.4 per cent; from 1890 to 1900, 32.2 per cent, a constantly decreasing ratio.

Washington was admitted in 1889. From 1860 to 1870 she increased 106.6 per cent; from 1870 to 1880, 213.6 per cent; from 1880 to 1890, 365.1 per cent, and in the decade after her admission only 46.3 per cent.

Wisconsin was admitted in 1848. From 1840 to 1850 she increased 886.9 per cent and in the next decade 154.1 per cent, which dropped in the succeeding decade, 1860 to 1870, to 85.9 per cent.

Wyoming was admitted in 1890. In 1870 to 1880 she increased 128 per cent, from 1880 to 1890, 192 per cent, and in the last decade only 49.2 per cent.

Arkansas remained an organized Territory seventeen years; Colorado, fourteen years; Iowa, Kansas, and Louisiana, about seven years; Minnesota, eight years; Missouri, nearly nine; Montana, about twenty-five; Nebraska, thirteen; the Dakotas, twenty-eight; Wyoming, twenty-two; Nevada, three; Utah, forty-four; Idaho, twenty-seven; Oregon, eleven, and Washington thirty-six.

The unavoidable conclusion is that statehood has little to do with growth. In nearly every instance the percentage of growth has dropped off very materially after a Territory became a State. Where the natural advantages induce people to settle, there they will flock regardless of the form of government or the lack of government. Where the people go, railroads and other industrial developments follow.

THE GREATEST GROWTH HAS PRECEDED ADMISSION TO THE UNION.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether that is not the rule in almost every one of the cases where Territories have been admitted as States because of the immense increase of population up to the time of their admission?

Mr. DICK. That is the rule almost without exception.

Mr. HALE. And it does not apply to the case of Arizona and New Mexico?

Mr. DICK. Not at all.

SOME COMPARATIVE CENSUS FIGURES.

The following comparative figures are taken from the Federal Census of 1900, and I insert them for comparison:

CHARACTER OF THE POPULATION.

At the last Federal census New Mexico had approximately the Congressional ratio, and Arizona had about half the number, excluding Indians not taxed. Arizona, however, had increased in the decade about twice as much, proportionately, as New Mexico, having a growth of 39.3 per cent to 21.9 per cent in New Mexico. In both Territories, however, the density of population was only little over one person to the square mile. New Mexico had 166,946 native white born inhabitants and 13,625 foreign born, to 70,508 native white born in Arizona and 24,253 foreign born. In other words, New Mexico had 93 per cent native born and 7 per cent foreign born to 80.3 per cent native born in Arizona and 19.7 per cent foreign born. The foreign born white population in New Mexico was 6.8 per cent, where the figure had stood for a decade, to 18.2 per cent foreign white population in Arizona. The native whites born and living in New Mexico constitute 78 per cent of the population while those in Arizona were only 38.1 per cent of that population. The foreign-born constitute 7 per cent of the population of New Mexico and 19.7 per cent of the population of Arizona. Those born of foreign parentage constitute 16.2 per cent of the population of New Mexico and 40.9 per cent of the population of Arizona. The foreign-born males over 21 who could not speak English were 2,833 in New Mexico to 4,911 in Arizona. The native whites born and living in the Territory constitute 78 per cent of the population of New Mexico and 38.1 per cent of the population of Arizona.

If the Americans of Spanish descent in New Mexico have not been Americanized in language as rapidly as have other communities of foreign descent in the United States, it has been solely on account of the sparsity of population in New Mexico and the little incentive there has been to a large immigration of Americans from other States in the Union.

COMPARATIVE STATISTICS OF AGRICULTURE.

The following figures are taken from the statistics of agriculture of the census of 1900:

Value of live stock on farms and ranges: Arizona, $15,545,687; New Mexico, $31,727,400; total, $47,273,087; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $96,208,263.

Value of farm lands and buildings: Arizona, $13,682,960; New Mexico, $20,888,814. Other States and Territories, including Delaware and Rhode Island, far exceed these figures, and even the farm lands and buildings in the District of Columbia almost equal the figure of Arizona. For Oklahoma and the Indian Territory the figures are $170,804,675.

Total number of farms: Arizona, 5,809; New Mexico, 12,311; total 18,120; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, 107,000.

Number of males engaged in agriculture: Arizona, 13,473; New Mexico, 25,947; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, 177,826; Delaware, 18,413. All other States larger, except Rhode Island, 10,512.

Total value of farm products of 1899: Arizona, $6,997,097; New Mexico, $10,155,215; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $73,119,746; Nevada, $6,758,337; Rhode Island, $6,333,864; Delaware, $9,290,777.

Total expenditure for labor on farms in 1899: Arizona, $1,152,670; New Mexico, $1,951,110; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $4,675,520; Rhode Island, $1,332,360; Delaware, $1,075,960.

Gross farm income of 1899: Arizona, $8,111,132; New Mexico, $12,926,635; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $87,106,231; Delaware, $6,908,577; Rhode Island, $5,545,695.

Reported value of domestic animals on farms and ranges: Arizona, $15,375,286; New Mexico, $31,644,179; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $94,746,713; Vermont, $17,373,169; New Jersey, $16,269,548.

Value of live stock: Arizona, $5,193,843; New Mexico, $9,793,484; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $52,408,700; Connecticut, $9,136,180; New Jersey, $16,101,260.

THE SMALL AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT.

The census plate showing the value of farm products per square mile shows only a small spot on Arizona, around Phoenix, indicating a production of $100 per square mile. The showing in New Mexico is little better, except for a considerable section in the north-central part of the State, where the production is as much as $500 to $1,000 per square mile.

The plate showing the proportion of improved land to total area makes an equally meager showing. There is one small dot on the map of Arizona showing over 10 per cent. There are two such sections in New Mexico. In the rest of these two Territories less than 1 per cent of the land is improved.

The areas of cultivated land in Arizona are little more than specks on the plate. In New Mexico there are two thin streaks, which mark the valleys of the Rio Grande and the Rio Pecos rivers. They unite above Albuquerque, and from there north to Colorado the cultivated land represents the lower portion of a thin trunk, to which the river valleys mentioned belong as slender limbs.

FARM ACREAGE OF ARIZONA VERY SMALL.

The entire total acreage in farms in Arizona was 1,135,227, of which only 254,521 acres are indicated as improved, and 185,000 acres were actually farmed. The land and improvements, except buildings, were valued at $11,416,460, buildings at $2,266,500, implements and machinery, $765,200. There are numerous single counties in the State of Ohio which make a far better showing than is represented by these figures.

The total value of farm property, including land, with improvements, implements, machinery, and live stock, was, for Arizona, $29,993,847; New Mexico, $53,767,824; Oklahoma and Indian Territory, $297,525,433; Delaware, $40,607,654; Rhode Island, $26,989,189.

HER LOW RANK IN AGRICULTURE.

Agriculturally considered, therefore, Arizona ranks with Rhode Island, Delaware, and Nevada. There are hundreds of counties in the older States which outrank Arizona in the number of acres under cultivation and in the value of farms and improvements.

A plate in the volume of the last census devoted to agriculture shows the rank of the States in total number of improved and unimproved acres in farms. At the bottom of the list is Rhode Island, and above, in the order named, come Delaware, Arizona, Connecticut, and Nevada. The order of the States, commencing at the bottom, in total value of farm land, with products, improvements, live stock, and farm implements, is practically the same, ranking in this order: Rhode Island, Nevada, Arizona, Delaware, and New Mexico.

These two immense Territories, then, each of which is larger than any of the States of the Union except three, and which, combined, would have an area larger than any State save Texas, if ranked according to agricultural wealth are in the same class with Rhode Island and Delaware, the two smallest Commonwealths of the Union, and Nevada, which is almost as poor, agriculturally, although in area the fourth State in size in the Union.

THEIR STANDING IN PRODUCTION OF CEREALS AND OTHER CROPS.

New Mexico ranks thirteenth among the States and Territories in total number of farms reporting wheat raised and Arizona thirty-fifth.[a]

New Mexico ranks forty-fourth in the production of cereals in number of pounds and Arizona forty-sixth.[b]

New Mexico ranks thirty-seventh in total production of wheat in bushels and Arizona thirty-ninth.[c]

In value of all crops raised in 1899, including vegetables, Arizona, with $2,432,471 worth, ranks fiftieth in order of rank and New Mexico forty-seventh, with $3,030,290.[d]

Neither Arizona nor New Mexico figures as a cotton-producing State.

The total acreage of irrigated crops in Arizona was 137,233; acres of all crops, 150,872. New Mexico, 182,804 acres irrigated; acres of all crops, 204,028. Value of crops produced on irrigated land—Arizona, $2,250,519; New Mexico, $2,757,107.

OFFICIAL STATISTICS FOR 1903.

The official figures issued by the United States Bureau of Statistics for 1903 show the following:

Wheat production: Arizona, 483,964 bushels, worth $450,087; New Mexico, 822,701 bushels, worth $617,026; Oklahoma, 24,482,637 bushels, worth $15,424,061.

Corn production: Arizona, 194,925 bushels, worth $175,432; New Mexico, 956,688 bushels, worth $717,516; Oklahoma, 34,748,199 bushels, worth $13,204,316.

Oat production: Arizona, 64,468 bushels, worth $39,325; New Mexico, 345,147 bushels, worth $213,991; Oklahoma, 8,124,230 bushels, worth $2,762,238.

Barley crop: Arizona, 555,107 bushels, worth $399,677; New Mexico, 20,282 bushels, worth $12,980; Oklahoma, 410,548 bushels, worth $180,641.

Hay crop: Arizona, $2,855,132; New Mexico, $1,796,948; Oklahoma, $1,868,758.

Irish potatoes: Arizona, none; New Mexico, $94,785; Oklahoma, $781,752.

Wool production: Arizona, 4,387,500 pounds; New Mexico, 16,250,000 pounds.

Total value of production of wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, hay, and potatoes: Arizona, $3,919,653; New Mexico, $3,453,246; Oklahoma, $34,254,998.

Value of horses and mules on farms: Arizona, $3,095,484; New Mexico, $2,207,322; Oklahoma, $21,092,512.

Arizona had 10,000,000 cattle in 1903, New Mexico 14,000,000, and Oklahoma 23,000,000.

Arizona had over a million sheep, New Mexico nearly four million, and Oklahoma very few. Oklahoma, on the other hand, had nearly half a million hogs to only a few thousand in both Arizona and New Mexico.

The total value of animals in Arizona was $16,000,000, New Mexico nearly twenty-four millions, and Oklahoma forty-seven millions.

Mr. FLINT. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DICK. Certainly.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF IRRIGATION.

Mr. FLINT. Has the Senator the figures there to show the amount of lands that will be irrigated under the present projects contemplated by the Government?

Mr. DICK. Replying to the Senator from California I will say that before the close of my remarks I expect to discuss with considerable completeness the very subject to which the Senator refers, namely, that of irrigation; and in that discussion I expect to give the entire acreage which it is proposed to reclaim or irrigate by the systems now in process of construction or contemplation.

THE MINERAL OUTPUT.

In 1902 Arizona produced $4,000,000 worth of gold; New Mexico only half a million.

Arizona also produced nearly $4,000,000 worth of silver, and New Mexico half a million. On the other hand, New Mexico mined nearly a million tons of coal in 1902, while none is credited to Arizona. The total product of the mines of Arizona the past fiscal year is put at $30,000,000—over half the entire wealth produced. In New Mexico mining ranks third in importance of her interests.

BANKING AND RAILROADS.

In 1903 Arizona had eleven national banks and New Mexico nineteen; the capital stock, $605,000 to $1,162,000; individual deposits, $3,355,000 to $5,562,000. Total resources of all banks, $11,000,000 to $10,600,000.

On June 30, 1903, Arizona had a railroad mileage of 1,680½ miles. The last annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission placed the figure, on June 30, 1904, at 1,751.35 miles. The estimate of the governor of the Territory, in his last annual report, is 1,836.94 miles. The railroad mileage of New Mexico in 1903 was 2,399.26 miles; in 1904, 2,404.66; in 1905, 2,556.44. The combined mileage in these two Territories is about equal to the mileage in the two Territories which it is proposed to admit as the State of Oklahoma. The commercial valuation of the railroad property in the two Territories is given by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year 1904 as follows: Arizona, $68,356,000; New Mexico, $86,400,000, or an average value per mile in Arizona of $39,000; in New Mexico, $34,500.

DISSATISFACTION WITH CENSUS RETURNS COMMON.

Dissatisfaction with census returns is a very common complaint. Prosperous, thriving cities and communities are rarely satisfied with the official figures of population. By the census of 1900 Arizona was given 122,212 people and New Mexico 193,777. Arizona now claims 175,000 and New Mexico 350,000. Both claims are undoubtedly exaggerated. The Director of the Census estimates that on July 1, 1905, Arizona had 140,000 people[a] and 225,000 was probably about the number of people living in New Mexico at that time, the combined claimed population—365,000—of both Territories being less than one-fourth the average population of the States already in the Union. By the last census Arizona had 26,480 Indians, 1,419 Chinese, and 24,233 foreign born—over 40 per cent of the total population. New Mexico had 13,144 Indians, 341 Chinese, and only 13,567 foreign born—less than 15 per cent of the population.

POPULATION AND DENSITY OF POPULATION.

The annual reports of the agents of the Bureau of Indian Affairs[b] show an Indian population in 1904 of 38,567 in Arizona and 17,064 in New Mexico, indicating a much more rapid increase in the Indian population in Arizona than in New Mexico. Arizona, by the last census, contained 14,172 people born in Mexico, while New Mexico had only 6,649, or less than one-half as many. If the census estimate of 140,000 people living in Arizona in 1905 is correct, and you take therefrom the Indians reported there in 1904 and the Chinese living there, barely 100,000 people are left who were or could be full-fledged American citizens, and this number is only about one-half the Congressional ratio. Arizona, by the last census, had 1.1 persons to the square mile, New Mexico 1.6 persons, Indian Territory 12.6 persons, Oklahoma 10.3 persons. The question of present population is, however, not so important as the possibility of sustaining an increased population. The total possible amount of land in Arizona which may be irrigated is about 1 per cent. There is not an agricultural Congressional district in the entire country which does not contain more land which may be cultivated and does not report much larger and more valuable crops. Such are the official figures.

TOPOGRAPHY OF ARIZONA.

The logic of stern, inexorable facts opposes separate statehood for Arizona and New Mexico. Let us consider the topography.

The Territory of Arizona is sharply divided by the main axis of the great Colorado plateau, which enters the Territory at the northwestern corner and crosses it in a southeasterly direction and reaches a height of 13,000 feet. About 47,000 square miles lying along this plateau and sloping gradually to the north exceed an elevation of 5,000 feet. On most of this plateau the rainfall is insufficient to cultivate crops successfully, and the land is devoted to sheep and cattle raising. About 27,000 square miles have an altitude of from 3,000 to 5,000 feet and the balance of about 39,000 square miles lies below the elevation of 3,000 feet. This portion of the Territory lies south of this mountain axis and its northeastern boundary line is marked by steep slopes.[c]

AGRICULTURE DEPENDS SOLELY UPON IRRIGATION.

It has been declared this high mountain axis made a natural division, that it could only be penetrated at points where railroads had already crossed it, and that it furnished a strong argument why the two Territories should not be united into one State.[a] Reference to this point will be made later. It is this portion of Arizona lying in the southwestern part of the Territory and about the size of the State of Ohio, which contains the largest part of the present population of Arizona. In this low country there is not rainfall sufficient even for grazing, and only on favored mountain slopes can cattle be raised successfully. Here agriculture depends solely upon irrigation and is limited by the water supply.[b]

STORAGE BASINS NECESSARY TO INCREASE FARM AREA.

It is admitted that the limit of cultivation by present methods of irrigation has been reached, and that immense storage basins are necessary to preserve the water that flows in flood times, in order to increase the area of cultivation.[c] The rivers which furnish water for irrigation in Arizona are the Gila, which rises in New Mexico, and its tributaries, the Verde River, the Tonto River, Salt River, San Francisco River, San Pedro River, and others, and the Colorado River, which forms the boundary line between Arizona and California, and enters the Territory about the center of its northern boundary line. One of its principal tributaries is the San Juan River, which rises in Colorado and dips down into the northwestern county of New Mexico, and then goes north again into Utah, where it joins its waters to the Colorado.

THE COLORADO AND GILA RIVER SYSTEMS.

There are thus two river systems—the Colorado and the Gila—the former, with its tributaries, draining about one-half the Territory, but with river beds so deep that they can but seldom be used for irrigation.[d] Of the total irrigated acreage in the Territory 90.5 per cent lies in the valley of the Gila River and its tributaries. There are already large and important irrigation systems here and the population which can be sustained is limited solely by the supply of water available for irrigation purposes.

MANY ONCE IRRIGATED PLAINS ARE NOW DESERTS.

While farming by irrigation has, under most favorable conditions, almost the certainty of an exact science, yet the obstacles are many, and nature is not always subdued. The desert plains of Persia and Assyria were once the homes of teeming cities and a country of immense wheat production, raised by irrigation. They are now dreary wastes of sand, showing that man does not always prevail in the attempt to conquer dry lands by irrigation.

PREHISTORIC IRRIGATION IN ARIZONA.

When the Spaniards first discovered this country they found the ruins of a civilization so ancient that all memory of it was lost. Traces of ditches and ruins of old irrigation works where now are only sand and desert wastes prove that man, for a time, prevailed here in the contest against nature, but was finally destroyed and that ruin and desolation settled over land which once blossomed and bore fruit abundantly.

SOME OF THE DIFFICULTIES OF IRRIGATION.

It may be profitable to consider some of these problems of irrigation, especially since so much is claimed for it and so much depends upon it.

In these great areas of valley land in the southwestern portion of the Territory, under a semitropical sun, where the greatest development of agriculture is taking place, water is more valuable than gold. Here irrigation was carried on by the Indians long before the advent of white men. In many of these river valleys for long distances the water of the river flows underground, and can only be reached by sinking wells and erecting pumping stations. The experience of Arizona with this character of irrigation shows that the supply is limited, and that the limit of the number of acres which can be cultivated is soon reached.[e] In the fertile mesa region, lying near the junction of the Verde and Salt rivers, where a great deal of land is under cultivation and where the crop returns are most marvelous, many wells have been sunk. Water here has been found at an average of from 20 to 40 feet below the surface, and after passing through a thick vein of clay water has been found again at from six to eight hundred feet deep. That the supply of water from these surface wells is far from being inexhaustible is shown by the fact that the normal level of the water below the average surface of the ground lowered over 11 feet from July, 1901, to July, 1904.[f] A record of over 300 wells put down around Phoenix since 1882 shows almost without exception that the volume of water has diminished and the level is constantly lowered by use.[g] The water varies at different times of the year, and the steady use of one well will lower the level in near-by wells. A good many of these wells have gone dry, and others are dry part of the time.[h]

UNDERGROUND WATER SUPPLY UNCERTAIN.

Throughout this region the water table of underground water has steadily lowered in the past few years from 7 to 20 feet, and even more, and wells have had to be deepened to find water again. This water is taken from the stream which flows under the ground.

There are deep wells near Phoenix, which is in this neighborhood, some supplying the city, which pump 2,000 gallons per minute, but the supply is uncertain. There are near-by wells which should furnish ample water if the supply is plentiful, but which give very little water.[c]

At the Indian school near by the water level in one well lowered 22 feet in about eight years. In a near-by well water was found at 51 feet below the surface and immediately rose 15 feet in the well when struck; but as the drill went down until sand was punctured at 150 feet, the water in the well immediately went down 64 feet more, being apparently sucked into the sand. One well furnished 2,200 gallons per minute, but very few equal or approach this amount, and even the largest can be easily lowered or even drained by excessive pumping. The supply, therefore, is limited.[d]

SALT AND ALKALI IN THE WATER.

New irrigation works higher up the river have been depriving the lower proprietors of water they had long enjoyed. The silt water brought down in flood times has been injurious to the crops. Some water struck in these wells is so salt that it is almost clear brine. All this underground water shows considerable salt, but where it can be used in connection with silt river water, the danger of depositing an excess of salts on the land is minimized. The continual use of these wells generally improves the water, but an analysis of the Phoenix city supply shows a noticeable increase in salt contents in the past few years. Many wells are so strong in alkali and the bitter salts that they have been abandoned, and many such wells have been filled in. Some of these appear to improve by pumping, but in some such cases this means not so much an improvement of the water as an increasing accommodation of the owner's taste to salt water. A stranger might have found it intolerable.[c]

THIS WATER INJURIOUS TO VEGETATION.

Whether the water coming from these wells is injurious to vegetation because of the salt it contains is not yet fully determined. The water users themselves think it is. The last report of the Geological Survey says so.[f] Harmful accumulations of alkali are liable to collect. In many places no harmful results are noticed, but elsewhere white incrustations of salt cover the land, and some land has been abandoned because of accumulation of alkali.[g]

The water which supplies these wells comes from the river, and the river-bed level is the level of the water in the nearest wells. Thus the rivers of Arizona are sometimes above ground and sometimes under ground. Floods of even noticeable volume have been known to sink into the sands and gravel which fill the valleys within a distance of 6 miles. The underground conditions are so variable that the selection of sites for wells is a matter of pure guesswork.[h]

It is said that pumping for irrigation in the Salt River Valley can probably be carried on with profit over an area of 500 square miles. The underflow is large, but not inexhaustible, and too great use lowers the water level beyond practicable pumping distance.

THE SALT RIVER VALLEY.

This Salt River Valley contains the largest irrigated area in the Territory. Salt River flows across the southerly portion of the Territory and after it joins the Verde River, which drains the central portion of Arizona, the two streams make the largest river in the Territory, larger even than the Gila, whose name the river takes after they unite. The flow of the Salt River ranges from 100 cubic feet per second to many times that amount. In the great flood of 1891 the mean discharge increased from 835 second-feet in three days to 276,000 feet, and diminished the third day after to 14,890 feet. Two days later an even greater flood came, which reached a maximum of 300,000 second-feet, and subsided in two days again to 15,000 second-feet. There was another flood the year before, not so large, but on the average they are a great many years apart. The water supply is not enough to irrigate the improved lands, except in very wet years.[a]

SEVERE DROUGHTS AND DESTRUCTIVE FLOODS.

The long drought which prevailed in Arizona for several years was broken last year by excessive rainfall and tremendous floods. The latter inflicted great damage, washing away railroad bridges and embankments, destroying irrigating dams and canals. In Apache County the dams and reservoirs which were the sole dependence of large cultivated areas were entirely destroyed. This excessive precipitation followed six years of drought. None can tell what the next six years will bring forth. The deficiency of water may be greater than ever before.[b]

THE EXCESSIVE EVAPORATION.

The limit of cultivation has been reached and new water supplies are necessary. This is only possible by the construction of immense storage systems. These require dams, and dam construction involves serious difficulties and problems not yet entirely solved. The cost of masonry dams is sometimes prohibitory, and rock-filled dams may lose water excessively, by percolation. Over a large part of the Territory the mean annual precipitation is 8 or 9 inches, but at Phoenix it is less than 8 inches, while the evaporation is nearly 100 inches a year, or a foot of evaporation to an inch of rainfall. The limit to the economical height of a dam is determined by the supply of water available for storage, while a basin intended for the storage of water for any considerable time must be much larger than the actual need of water because of the excessive evaporation.[c]

FAILURES OF HIGH MASONRY DAMS.

There are four recorded failures of high masonry dams—one in Africa, two in Europe, and one in Texas. In all of the four the foundation was defective. It is, therefore, considered necessary to dig to solid rock for foundation, and some good sites are not available because solid rock is so far below the surface.[d]

GREAT AMOUNT OF SILT CARRIED IN THE RIVERS.

The sediment carried in these southwestern rivers varies, but in some it is very large. During a flood the Colorado River has carried 1,500,000 tons of silt in twenty-four hours. The amount of silt carried by the Gila is considerable, many observers insisting it is equal to half the volume.[e] It actually figures from 10 to 2 per cent. Even estimated at the smaller figure, it would mean that a reservoir on this river would fill up with silt matter unless some arrangement is made to carry it off. One projected reservoir would fill with solid matter, it is estimated, in eighteen years and another in twenty-eight years. This would require building new reservoirs in time or raising the dams already built. As the official report well says, it would be cruel to develop a civilization based on irrigation which would have to be destroyed at the end of a generation. While the Government experts engaged in this work believe this difficulty can be overcome, the problem is a serious one and a most expensive one.[f]

NUMEROUS PERILS THREATEN IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

Several ditches built to divert water from the Gila River have been practically abandoned, due to the shortage of water, caused principally by the increased use of water in the upper stretchers of the river.[g] Dams have been washed out by heavy floods and great damage caused.[h] Most of the land which can be irrigated by storage projects has already been taken up and there is practically no public land open to settlement which can be benefited by any feasible project of this kind. It is true that reserve storage basins can be constructed to hold the waters of the tremendous floods which occur occasionally, but their practical utility is limited to three or four years because of the evaporation and the filling by silt.[i] The stability and perpetuity of these reservoirs are constantly menaced, and principally from these occasional tremendous floods. Enormous and very expensive facilities are required to carry off water from the reservoir without injury to the dam. No entirely efficient plan has yet been put in operation to carry off the silt matter which will eventually fill these reservoirs and which is brought down in enormous quantities by these great floods.[a]

MUCH LAND ABANDONED FOR LACK OF WATER.

There has been a great waste of energy in the Salt River Valley in constructing parallel canals which could only be inadequately supplied with water. Lack of familiarity with and uncertainty concerning the rights of water users has resulted in long-drawn-out and expensive litigation. Land has been brought under cultivation which was afterwards abandoned for lack of water, and at a great waste of time and labor. Even under a storage system the limit of irrigation will soon be reached, and in no part of the Territory can enough water be furnished to supply the land which is adapted to cultivation.[b]

ONLY 1 PER CENT CAN POSSIBLY BE IRRIGATED.

The total area which can possibly be cultivated in the Gila River and Salt River valleys, under the most favorable conditions and after the expenditure of vast sums for storage basins, is put at 876,000 acres, an estimate which is very generous, and which the Geological Survey says can not be approached in actual results for very many years.[c]

VICISSITUDES OF AGRICULTURE UNDER IRRIGATION.

Agriculture by irrigation has its vicissitudes and uncertainties, even under the most favorable conditions. The development of new irrigation schemes in both New Mexico and Arizona has often taken water from cultivators lower down the stream, and resulted in great loss and misery. In some of the agricultural sections of New Mexico the population actually decreased in ten years, because much water had been diverted from New Mexico by canals and irrigation schemes in Colorado which were fed by the waters of the Rio Grande.

One farmer living near the Rio Grande testified that his farm was not watered regularly and that he suffered a great deal from want of water. He stated that many farmers have lost their farms, and there has been destruction amounting to many thousand dollars. He has 300 acres of land, but could not raise anything some years on account of lack of water. He had lost his orchard and nearly everything he had.[d]

MANY FARMS RUINED FOR LACK OF WATER.

In 1902 it is said that out of two hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy-five thousand acres available for irrigation by artificial canals not over 90,000 acres were actually irrigated.[e]

An instance is given of one ranch of 340 acres, of which 280 had not had any water for three years, and only 40 acres were actually cultivated.[e]

EXCESSIVE CLAIMS AS TO AREA ACTUALLY IRRIGATED.

The Geological Survey reports the extreme difficulty of obtaining reliable figures concerning the area irrigated in any locality, because of many influences tending toward exaggeration of statements. Claims are made and proofs submitted that hundreds of acres are irrigated, although as a matter of fact the actual irrigation of them has amounted to almost nothing. There is a very great discrepancy between the acreage reported by the Government as actually irrigated and the acreage returned for taxation.[f]

SERIOUS CONDITIONS AT PHOENIX.

The conditions at Phoenix for a number of years were very serious, because the available water supply had not been enough to supply more than one-half or two-thirds of the land under cultivation. The volume of water in the river had been steadily shrinking for the past few years and no appreciable quantity of water could be obtained otherwise.

SUFFERINGS OF THE INDIANS DEPENDENT ON IRRIGATION.

A pathetic instance of the misery caused by the deprivation of the usual and long-accustomed water supply exists in the case of the Indians on the Gila River Indian Reservation, a tract of 257,120 acres, extending along both sides of the Gila from the mouth of Salt River and a short distance south of Phoenix.[g] The annual rainfall here is between 7 and 9 inches, but the Indians living here have long been industrious and successful farmers, raising large crops yearly, enjoying continued prosperity, and boasting that they had always been the friend of the white man. When the Apaches gave trouble and were massacreing and shedding blood these Indians were loyal to the United States. During the past fifteen years, however, the development of irrigation higher up both these rivers cut short their supply of water and reduced them to helplessness and destitution, and by reason of this diversion of water the land cultivated by these Indians has been reduced from 14,000 to 7,000 acres or less, and even this is insufficiently irrigated.

RETRIBUTION WHICH OVERTOOK THE FLORENCE CANAL.

The construction of the Florence Canal was the last blow. Year after year the Indians plowed and sowed and irrigated only to have their crops destroyed before maturity by lack of water when water was needed. The result was demoralization, relapse into indolence, vice, dependence upon charity, or degeneration into thieves and vagabonds. The Indian Bureau did what it could, the Department of Justice came to the rescue, but, notwithstanding all these efforts, the Florence Canal continued to divert the waters which belonged to the Indians, and the United States Government directly encouraged settlers to go in there and make use of this water. Later retribution overtook the Florence Canal itself because of the diversion of water for irrigation for new projects far above that point.[a]

NEW "SALTON SEA" MADE BY COLORADO RIVER.

An address delivered in this city last month by one of the engineers of the United States Reclamation Service describes some of the difficulties and dangers connected with irrigation work. He describes a well-known case, where an irrigation canal diverted the main waters of the stream by which it was fed and caused very great damage. This is what happened with the Colorado River, in the southern part of California, in what is now called "Imperial Valley," but is more familiarly known as "Death Valley." Irrigation wrought its usual miracle here, railroads were built, towns grew up, and last summer some 8,000 people were living in this valley below the level of the sea. A great flood came, which could not be controlled, and the Colorado River poured its normal flow, as well as its flood stream, into the Salton Sea, now a great body of water 60 miles in length and many miles wide.

The railroad has been submerged and the company forced to build on higher ground. The salt works, which had become a permanent industry, have been destroyed, and there is danger, if the river can not be returned to its proper channel, that the rising sea will submerge all of the valley which is below sea level, which includes a very large area. (National Geographic Magazine, February, 1906, p. 95.)

PROGRESS OF IRRIGATION IN ARIZONA.

The last Federal census says that of the 72,268,000 acres of land surface of Arizona only 1,335,327, or 2.7 per cent, were included in farms in 1900 and only 254,521, or 0.35 per cent, were improved, while the irrigated land, outside the Indian reservations, was only 185,396 acres.[b]

In the ten years from 1890 to 1900 545 miles of canals and ditches were constructed, which added 26,297 acres to the irrigated area. The total increase in irrigated land in ten years was 119,575 acres, a percentage of increase in ten years of 181.7 per cent. Of the total number of farms in the Territory, 73.8 per cent were irrigated, or 81.4 per cent of the number of improved acres, and 88.5 per cent of all crops raised were produced by irrigation.[c]

It is a significant fact that in 1899 48,463 acres of irrigated land were in pasture and crops that did not mature, and were, therefore, probably a total loss.

Of the total irrigated area of the Territory, all but 974 acres were watered from streams, the remainder from wells. The average cost of irrigating this land was $23.90 per acre.[d]

MUCH PUBLIC LAND UNAPPROPRIATED BUT FEW TAKERS.

There are still 47,000,000 acres of land in Arizona unappropriated and unreserved, open to any eligible homesteader who may apply. The total number of original homestead entries in the Territory during the past year was only 292. The business is so small that for most excellent economic reasons the two land districts have been consolidated into one.[e]

CONDITIONS IN NEW MEXICO LITTLE BETTER.

The area of New Mexico represents 122,460 square miles, or 78,374,400 acres. As observed heretofore, the cultivable land in this Territory lies along the Rio Grande and the Pecos valleys and a broad expanse of grazing land in the north, which is the southern extension of the Colorado Rocky Mountains. In San Juan County, in the extreme northwest of the State, there has been considerable development through irrigation. The system in vogue along the lower Rio Grande is very primitive and practically unchanged from the methods pursued long before the white man came to the State. The census report indicates that the development of the agricultural resources of New Mexico depends largely upon the control of the Rio Grande. It is not encouraging to the future of agricultural development here that there are a number of canals on the headwaters of the stream in Colorado which can easily absorb all the water which runs in the river. The result is that during the irrigation season the river for several hundred miles in the southern part of the Territory is often nothing but a dry waste of sand and dust, which is not reached by a drop of water.[a]

Two-thirds of the population of New Mexico and three-fourths of the land under cultivation are in the valley of the Rio Grande and its tributaries. New Mexico without the Rio Grande would be almost like Egypt without the Nile.

MOST OF THE RIVERS DRY IN SUMMER TIME.

The Canadian River flows through a valley 200 miles in length within the Territory before it reaches the Pecos, but there is a general scarcity of water during the irrigation season throughout the entire basin drained by this river, which has greatly retarded agricultural development and has caused the abandonment of many acres of valuable land.

The Pecos River runs entirely dry for several months in the year, and the supply of water for irrigation varies considerably. One ditch in Guadalupe County, which irrigates 1,500 acres in an average year, in 1899 could only supply water to irrigate 98 acres. Of the land surface of New Mexico, only 5,130,878 acres, or 6.5 per cent, were included in farms in 1899, and of the improved land only 303,438 acres were located outside of Indian reservations, and in 1899 the irrigated area outside the Indian reservations was 203,893 acres, or 67.2 per cent of the improved land.[b]

FARMS RUINED BY NEW IRRIGATION SCHEMES.

Of the percentage of all crops raised 89.6 per cent was irrigated, and of the total acreage irrigated all but 1,004 acres were watered from streams. The average cost per acre of this irrigation was $20.41, and the average value per acre of irrigated land was $29.26. Over three times the acreage irrigated was provided with ditches and only lacked water to make them cultivable. The result of recent new irrigation projects in this Territory has been to deprive lands lower down the river beds of the water which they had been accustomed to use for years and decades. Thousands of acres once cultivated are now of no value, because the water supply is insufficient. The irrigated farms in the Territory were 74.1 per cent of the total number of farms; in acreage, 56.4 per cent; in value of land and improvements, exclusive of buildings, 77.8 per cent; in implements and machinery, 75.9 per cent; in live stock, 49.7 per cent; in total farm wealth, 64.5 per cent.[c]

LAST ANNUAL REPORT OF RECLAMATION SERVICE.

The annual report of the Director of the Geological Survey for the year 1904–5, dated August 21, 1905, details the work of the Reclamation Service, which was created to carry into effect the act of Congress of June 17, 1902. The plans already made involve the investment of practically the entire fund, now about $30,000,000.[d]

Actual construction is now in progress on eight projects, including Salt River, Arizona, and Hondo, N. Mex. Proposals were received for work on the Lagoona dam, Yuma project, California and Arizona.

In Arizona there are two large and well-known reservoir sites—the San Carlos, on the Gila River, and the Salt River, on Salt River, the upper tributary of the Gila.

PROJECTED SAN CARLOS RESERVOIR.

The projected reservoir at San Carlos, on the Gila River, will probably furnish enough water to irrigate the entire 55,000 acres of farm land in Pinal County, which is now taxed, but not more than one-tenth of which can be irrigated at the present time.

General examination has been made of the probabilities of storing water in various parts of the Territory and of the underground waters of Salt River Valley that may be made available by pumping. The Salt River project involves a dam 270 feet high, to store 1,100,000 acre-feet of water, and power plants to pump water in the lower valley, at an estimated cost of $3,000,000. The dam site is 70 miles above Phoenix, and the water will be utilized on 160,000 to 200,000 acres of land near there. By pumping, an additional 40,000 acres can be irrigated.

DIFFICULTIES UNDER WHICH THIS PROJECT LABORS.

The location is so nearly inaccessible that brick, lime, and cement are being made on the ground. The contract for the dam has been let.

The quantity of water in the Salt River Valley is variable, some of it containing so much common salt that its continued use for irrigation is detrimental to crops. The probability of the economic elimination of this salt is a problem under consideration.

The San Carlos reservoir site is on the White Mountain Indian Reservation, below the mouth of San Carlos Creek, on the Gila River; dam, to cost $1,200,000, to hold about 300,000 acre-feet of water. The water supply is scanty. The main difficulty will be the large amount of silt carried by the Gila River. Observations of river flow and sediment are being continued, and reconnaissance surveys have been made of possible reservoir sites on the upper Gila.

THE YUMA PROJECT.

The Yuma project proposes to irrigate 91,000 acres on the Arizona side of the Colorado River. A high diversion dam is impossible. Five thousand acres next to the Mexican line in Arizona will be subject to overflow, so they can not be irrigated. Some land will be too high, leaving a balance of 73,100 acres in Arizona which can be irrigated. The water supply of the Colorado is adequate. The disposition of the silt of the river is one of the most difficult features. Cost (estimated), $1,000,000.

NEW MEXICO.

Hondo project, on Hondo River, a tributary of the Pecos, about 12 miles from Roswell. Area to be irrigated, 10,000 acres; cost, $275,000. Construction is rapidly advancing.

Urton Lake project, on Pecos River, 60 miles north of Roswell, contemplates dam and canal about 35 miles long, to reclaim 60,000 acres.

Las Vegas project, 5 miles north of Las Vegas, is under consideration.

INTERNATIONAL QUESTIONS CONNECTED WITH THE RIO GRANDE.

It is proposed to store the flood waters of the Rio Grande in New Mexico to develop open valleys along the course of the river. Consideration, however, is required of the international questions involved between the United States and Mexico. The flow of the Rio Grande is so fluctuating that sufficient water for irrigation can not be furnished without regulation in storage reservoirs.

La Platte Valley project, in San Juan County, northwestern New Mexico, will reclaim 50,000 acres. No location for storage basin has yet been found.

CENSUS BULLETIN NO. 16 ON IRRIGATION.

Census Bulletin No. 16, of irrigation in the United States in 1902, transmitted October 18, 1904, adds some details of interest.

The Salt River Valley in Arizona was irrigated before the Spanish came, and supported a large population in the eighth or ninth century. The cliff dwellers in New Mexico also irrigated, and an extensive population once flourished there. The canals were skillfully conducted and some of them cut through solid rock. Over 8,000,000 acres of once worthless desert in Western States are now, by irrigation, producing each year crops worth $100,000,000.

Irrigation usually involves intensive agriculture and a decrease in the average size of farms and in the average number of irrigated acres per farm. The following figures are of interest:[a]

	Arizona.	New Mexico.	Nevada.
Number farms irrigated, 1902	3,867	9,285	2,250
Increase in 3 years ..... per cent..	29.7	17.8	18.6
Number acres irrigated	247,250	254,945	570,001
Increase in 3 years ..... per cent..	33.4	25	13.1
Average acres per farm	63.9	27.5	252.2
Construction cost of systems	$4,688,208	$4,301,915	$1,706,212
Average per irrigated acre	$18.96	$16.87	$2.99

ONLY SMALL PART OF ARIZONA CAPABLE OF IRRIGATION.

More than half of Arizona is over 5,000 feet high, and is part of the Colorado plateau. One-third is below the level of 5,000 feet. Except a few square miles, the entire Territory belongs to the Colorado River drainage basin. Little more than three-tenths of 1 per cent of the total area has been reclaimed, and it can not be carried much farther without storage. The main Colorado River basin occupies but a small place in Arizona's agricultural economy, as most of its course in the Territory lies in deep canyons.[b]

SMALL SHOWING MADE BY THESE TERRITORIES IN IRRIGATION.

The total number of acres irrigated and total number of farms irrigated shows California in the lead, with Colorado, Montana, and Utah following. New Mexico and Arizona make a comparatively small showing. Irrigation has wrought a wonderful transformation west of Yuma, Ariz., in California. Possibly the same future is in store for the land on the Arizona side. The extreme limit of the hope and faith of those who see the greatest future in store for agricultural possibilities in Arizona is 1,000,000 acres in irrigation. That figure is purely problematical. The volume of water furnished by the rivers of the Territory will never increase. The extreme limit of acreage possible to cultivate by the water supply is a fixed one, and it will be many years and only after the expenditure of immense sums in constructing storage basins before all this land can be utilized.

COLORADO CAN ABSORB ALL THE RIO GRANDE.

The great development of irrigation along the Rio Grande in Colorado has reduced the volume of the river in New Mexico, so that the supply can cover only a part of the land formerly irrigated. Water storage is absolutely essential. The present treaty between Mexico and the United States is a greater obstacle to development of irrigation than any engineering problem. This treaty prohibits the impounding of the waters of the Rio Grande and prevents the reclamation of an extensive area of land now desert and the irrigation of thousands of acres formerly cultivated. Less than 1 per cent of the stream's flow in Mexico comes from sources north of the Mexican line. Until the treaty is abrogated or amended large storage works on this stream can not be constructed. The Rio Grande irrigates 254,945 acres, or 9,285 farms, at a cost of $16.87 per irrigated acre. The Pecos River irrigates 56,497 acres, or 1,542 farms, at a cost of $48.41 per irrigated acre. The largest irrigation works in the United States are in New Mexico, and some of the largest projects under contemplation are there.[a]

JANUARY, 1906, BULLETIN OF THE RECLAMATION SERVICE.

A bulletin issued by the Reclamation Service of the United States Geological Survey, January, 1906, contains a brief statement concerning irrigation projects under consideration and construction by the Government. Without objection, I will insert it here as bearing forcibly on this subject.

The report is as follows:

IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The following brief statement regarding irrigation projects under consideration and construction by the United States Reclamation Service and concerning irrigable lands in public and private ownership which will eventually be reclaimed by means of proposed systems is published in circular form for convenience in answering inquiries and for the information of the public generally.

ARIZONA: SALT RIVER PROJECT.

This project contemplates the construction of a large storage dam at Roosevelt, Ariz., 270 feet in height, which will regulate the supply of water from gravity systems for about 160,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Phoenix. When the dam is constructed, there will be developed a large amount of power, which will be utilized to increase the water supply in the Salt River Valley by means of pumping from underground sources.

Early in 1904 contracts were awarded for construction of considerable auxiliary work—power canals, sluicing tunnels, etc. A cement mill was erected by the Government and is now in operation, furnishing a first-class quality of cement to be used in the works. The construction of the dam will require 220,000 barrels of cement. The excavation work for the power canals is completed, the lining of canals is nearly completed, and the work on the sluicing tunnel was finished on October 3, 1905. The contract for the construction of the large dam was awarded to J. M. O'Rourke & Co., of Galveston, Tex. It is understood that there are no public lands available under this project for homestead entry, the entire area having been filed upon by settlers, many of whom have gained title to the land. For information as to the possibility of acquiring lands by purchase from present owners and other data of a local character concerning the soil and climate of the valley, apply to Mr. B. A. Fowler, president of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, Phoenix, Ariz. The irrigable lands under this project are tributary to branch lines of the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroad systems.

CALIFORNIA: YUMA PROJECT.

This project contemplates diversion of the waters of Colorado River by means of proposed Laguna dam and sluiceways, about 10 miles northeast of Yuma, Ariz., into two canals, one on each side of the river. In Arizona these canals will irrigate all the bottom lands of Colorado and Gila rivers between the Laguna dam and the Mexican boundary (an area of 84,000 acres, in round numbers) and in California the bottom lands in the Yuma Indian Reservation (an area of 17,000 acres), all tributary to the Southern Pacific Railroad. Plans also contemplate the construction of a complete system of levees to protect the bottom lands from overflow and a pumping system to remove the surplus water from the low-lying areas.

Lands under this project have been withdrawn, under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, from all forms of entry except by homestead. The mesa lands have been withdrawn from all forms of entry. Under the provisions of this act an individual holding may not exceed 160 acres. Definite decision has not been reached as to the farm-unit area, but it will probably not exceed 40 acres to each entryman.

The method by which the lands of the Yuma Reservation will be disposed of to settlers has not yet been announced. It is probable, however, that the reservation will be thrown open upon the completion of the irrigation works.

The cost of the works will be assessed proportionately upon each acre of land reclaimed, to be paid by settlers in ten annual installments, without interest. The only additional charge will be for maintenance. The distribution of water, collection of payments, maintenance charges, etc., will be looked after by the Yuma County Water Users' Association, M. Winsor, president, at Yuma, Ariz. The members of this association are the landowners of the district to be affected. Printed matter and information of a local character regarding the section may be had upon application to association headquarters at Yuma, Ariz.

On July 6, 1905, a contract was awarded to J. G. White & Co., New York, for the construction of the Laguna dam and sluiceways. Excavation is being carried on, and other preliminary plans are under way with a view to the construction of the dam. On September 13, 1905, a contract was awarded for the construction of Yuma dikes, on which actual work is now under way.

COLORADO: UNCOMPAHGRE VALLEY PROJECT.

This project contemplates the diversion of waters of the Gunnison River by means of a tunnel 30,000 feet in length, cross-section 10½ by 11½ feet, cement lined, capacity 1,300 second-feet. The tunnel passes under a high divide and carries the water to the Uncompahgre Valley, where it will be utilized for the reclamation of 120,000 acres of land in Montrose and Delta counties. Construction of tunnel was begun in November, 1904, and work thereon has since been progressing rapidly. More than a mile of the tunnel is completed.

About 80 per cent of the irrigable lands under this project are in private ownership. The remaining 20 per cent are subject to homestead entry by bona fide settlers in accordance with the rules and regulations governing that class of entry. The farm unit for first-class fruit land will probably be 40 acres, while on other lands suitable for growing grain, sugar beets, and alfalfa 80-acre tracts may be filed upon. At the proper time filings upon these lands should be made through the local land office at Montrose, Colo. No water can be delivered for irrigation prior to the crop season of 1909. All inquiries for information of a local nature concerning the character of the soil, crops, and climate of the section, etc., should be addressed to the president of the Uncompahgre Valley Water Users' Association, Montrose, Colo. The lands are tributary to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway.

IDAHO: MINIDOKA PROJECT.

This project provides for the reclamation of about 130,000 acres of land lying on both sides of Snake River in southern Idaho. The area to be benefited is all Government land which has been withdrawn from general entry under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902, but remains subject to entry under the provisions of the homestead law. Homestead entries within a radius of 1½ miles from the center of each town site established are to be limited to 40-acre tracts, and those on all other lands under this project to 80 acres. The soil is excellent, being a deep sandy loam free from alkali, now producing a thrifty growth of sage brush. The cost of water right under this project will be $26 an acre. Settlers are permitted to pay their water-right assessment in ten annual installments, without interest. It is believed that all of the land is now filed upon by bona fide settlers. Contracts have been awarded as follows: In September, 1904, Bates & Rogers Construction Company, for construction of large dam, which is about one-half completed; in July, 1905, for construction of telephone system; during June and July, 1905, for construction of distribution system, this work being subdivided and contract awarded in sections to several contractors. Fair progress has been made in work on the distribution system, and strenuous effort is being made to complete the construction within the time specified by the contract. Present conditions indicate that water will probably be turned on the lands under the gravity canals late in the irrigating season of 1906. The lands to be included under this proposed system are tributary to the Oregon Short Line Railway, which has recently extended a branch line through the Minidoka tract, upon which are located three town sites. Early in 1906 the Government will sell at public auction a restricted number of lots in each town site.

IDAHO: PAYETTE-BOISE PROJECT.

The Payette-Boise project ultimately will reclaim about 350,000 acres of land in the valleys of the Payette, Boise, and Snake rivers in southwestern Idaho. Of this area about five-sixths is without present facilities for irrigation. The valleys are tributary to the Oregon Short Line, the Boise, Nampa, and Owyhee, and the Idaho Northern railroads.

The complete plans propose the utilization of both the Payette and Boise rivers, and include the construction of extensive storage works at the headwaters of each stream. The lands are in Ada, Canyon, and Owyhee counties and are smooth, with gentle slope to drainage. The work of construction will be taken up by units and several years will elapse before the whole project is completed.

Information concerning lands, climate, etc., can be obtained by addressing J. H. Lowell, president of the Water Users' Association, Caldwell, Idaho.

KANSAS: GARDEN CITY PROJECT.

This project, by means of an extensive pumping system, will provide a supply of water to irrigate about 8,600 acres situated just east of Deerfield in southwestern Kansas. The land in question is all in private ownership and is under an existing irrigation system owned by the Finney County Farmers' Irrigation Association. The attempt to furnish water for the irrigation of these lands by a gravity system supplied by diversion from the river has not met with success, owing to the rapid loss of water from the river to the gravels and the uncertain volume of flow in this stream.

The proposed pumping plant is designed for the recovery of underground waters, and involves the construction of 23 separate pumping stations, each driven electrically from a central power station located on the main line of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad.

The irrigation association now in existence proposes to transfer its system to the Finney County Water Users' Association, of Garden City, Kans., recently formed. Pledges of subscription to the stock of the Water Users' Association have been given for practically the entire 8,600 acres entitled to water from the system. The preparation of plans and specifications is well under way, and construction will be begun at an early date.

MONTANA: HUNTLEY PROJECT.

This project contemplates the reclamation of about 30,000 acres of land located along Yellowstone River in southeastern Montana, within the ceded portion of the Crow Indian Reservation, between Huntley and Bull Mountain station. The lands to be reclaimed are along the Northern Pacific and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroads. They form a portion of the area which the Crow Indians, by treaty ratified by act of Congress approved April 27, 1904, ceded to the United States. One of the conditions named was the allotment to the Indians of homestead entries upon the reclaimed land.

Upon the completion of said allotments, the area remaining is to be subject to disposition in accordance with the provisions of the homestead laws, and the rules and regulations governing the disposal of public land. The President of the United States is authorized to issue a proclamation giving notice to the public that the lands will be thrown open to general entry and such notice will be issued at the proper time. During 1904 surveys were made to outline a comprehensive system of irrigation for a portion of these lands. This will necessitate the construction of a main canal 40 miles in length.

Contracts have been awarded for the construction of divisions 1, 2, and 3 of main canal, and it is expected that work will be started shortly. Contract for structures was awarded on July 24, 1905. Bids for constructing a distributing system and telephone system were opened on December 15.

In addition to the cost of reclamation, the price of these lands is to be $4 an acre when entered under the homestead laws. Further information will be given to the public as the work progresses.

NEBRASKA-WYOMING: NORTH PLATTE PROJECT.

This project has for its object the storage of the flood and surplus waters of North Platte River in an immense reservoir in Wyoming, which will be made by constructing a dam 210 feet high in a narrow canyon of the stream just below the mouth of Sweetwater River. During the irrigating season the water will be permitted to flow down the channel of the river a number of miles, where a low diversion dam will turn it into canals which will distribute it over the lands to be irrigated. The land to be reclaimed is tributary to the Chicago and Northwestern, Burlington and Missouri River, and Union Pacific railroads. It is fertile and adapted to the successful growth of a wide variety of products. It is expected that water can be delivered for purposes of irrigation for the crop season of 1906. Several contracts for construction of auxiliary portions of the system have been awarded, as follows: On January 5, 1905, to Kilpatrick Brothers & Collins Company, for the construction of the Pathfinder tunnel, in Wyoming—this work was completed on August 15, 1905; on August 1, 1905, to Geddes & Seerie Stone Company, for the construction of the Pathfinder dam, in Wyoming—actual work under this contract commenced September 25, when excavation was begun at the westerly approach to the tunnel. In addition, contracts for excavation for about 95 miles of the Interstate Canal and for reinforced concrete structures on the first 45 miles have been awarded. Work on the different schedules is progressing steadily.

When construction work has been advanced sufficiently to render such action advisable, homestead entries may be filed upon the irrigable area that is in public ownership. The size of the farm unit will probably be 80 acres. Applications will be received at Cheyenne, Wyo., the local land office, for lands in that State, and at Sidney and Alliance, Nebr., the local land offices, for lands in Nebraska.

Landowners in the districts to be affected have organized the North Platte Valley Water Users' Association. Persons interested in the section may obtain information of a local character by addressing Mr Andrew Crawford, secretary of the association, at Scotts Bluff, Nebr.

NEVADA: TRUCKEE-CARSON PROJECT.

When completed it is believed that this system will provide an ample supply of water to irrigate about 350,000 acres of arid land in western Nevada. The first work of actual construction was begun in September, 1903, on a canal 31 miles in length, to divert water from Truckee River and convey it to the channel of Carson River, where a storage reservoir eventually will be built. This canal, together with about 270 miles of lateral ditches, is completed, and on June 17, 1905, the third anniversary of the reclamation act, occurred the formal opening of this project, the first to be constructed under authority of the law of June 17, 1902.

Water is now ready for delivery to about 50,000 acres, 30,000 of which are public lands, which have been thrown open to homestead entry, and may be filed upon by bona fide settlers, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the homestead laws and reclamation act. The lands are tributary to the Southern Pacific and the Nevada and California railroads. An assessment of $26 per acre will be charged against the land for its water right, payable in 10 annual installments without interest. Maps showing the location of available entries may be inspected at the Carson City, Nev., land office, where application should be filed.

The construction of outlet and regulation works at the outlet of Lake Tahoe, and the extension of the system to include additional areas will be undertaken at an early date.

NEW MEXICO: HONDO PROJECT.

This project contemplates the diversion of Hondo River, a tributary of the Pecos, and will make possible the reclamation of about 10,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Roswell. Contracts for the construction of the dam and canals were awarded on December 5, 1904, and, judging from the progress which has been made upon this work, it is believed that the system will be completed during 1906. On November 2 a contract was awarded to Wood, Bancroft & Doty, of Omaha, Nebr., for the construction of the earth embankment in connection with the project, and the contractors have begun the work. The Pecos and Northeastern Railroad has a line into Roswell. It may be possible to purchase homesteads from the present owners. Information on this subject and on the character of the soil and climate of the section may be had from Mr. J. W. Poe, president of the Rio Hondo Water Users' Association, Roswell, N. Mex.

NEW MEXICO: CARLSBAD PROJECT.

The principal works under the Carlsbad project include storage reservoirs on the Pecos River in Chaves County, and the extension of canals which have been constructed by private enterprise to irrigate about 15,000 acres of land. The development of Pecos Valley has been brought about by individuals who installed an extensive system of irrigation works, representing the outlay of more than a million dollars. On October 4, 1904, a flood in the Pecos River destroyed a large portion of Avalon dam, upon which the canal system depended for its supply. The owners of the canal system were unable to repair the damages, and as property valued at not less than $2,000,000 was threatened with destruction unless the water supply was provided, an appeal was made to the Government to take the works and to initiate construction in order to prevent the destruction of homes and property. It is expected that the construction of storage works will be begun at an early date. All the land under this project is in private ownership and is tributary to the Santa Fe Railroad. Inquiries concerning lands, crops, climate, etc., should be addressed to the Water Users' Association, Carlsbad, N. Mex.

NEW MEXICO-TEXAS: RIO GRANDE PROJECT.

The Rio Grande project involves the construction of a storage dam opposite Engle, N. Mex., across the Rio Grande, which will form a reservoir 175 feet deep at its lower end, 40 miles long, with a storage capacity of 2,000,000 acre-feet, for the irrigation of 180,000 acres of land in New Mexico, Texas, and Mexico.

The Leasburg diversion, which is a part of the Rio Grande project, calls for the construction of a 500-foot concrete dam, with pier, embankment, and sluice gates, head weir, and head gates. In connection with the diversion dam it will be necessary to construct 2 miles of full-size canal to connect with the old Las Cruces canal. Construction will be begun as soon as the landowners have given the Government security that this amount will be returned to the reclamation fund within a period of two years.

NORTH DAKOTA-MONTANA: LOWER YELLOWSTONE PROJECT.

This project contemplates the diversion of the waters of Yellowstone River at a point 17 miles northeast of Glendive, Mont., for the irrigation of 66,000 acres of land lying in northeastern Montana and northwestern North Dakota. The land is classed as follows: Montana, private lands, 14,618; public lands, 13,522; railroad lands, 16,742 acres; North Dakota, private lands, 12,786; public lands, 8,332 acres. The public lands under the project number 21,854 acres; railroad lands, 16,742 acres; and private lands, 27,404 acres, a total of 66,000 acres.

The public lands available for homestead entry should, at the proper time, be filed upon through the land office situated at Miles City, Mont. The lands to be affected by this system are tributary to the Northern Pacific Railway line, which passes through Glendive, 19 miles from the head gates, and the Great Northern Railroad, which has a station at Buford, 2 miles from the lower end of the project. They have been classified in detail. The most probable size for farms on this project will be 80-acre tracts.

Contract for the construction of the main canal was awarded in several sections, on July 11, 1905. On division 1, Schedule A, fair progress has been made. On division 1, Schedule B, of this work, excavation for structures is under way. Work on divisions 1, 2, and 3, Schedule B, of the main canal, is progressing satisfactorily. Bids were opened on November 15 for the construction of the main canal and lateral system, and for the construction of the Lower Yellowstone dam on December 5. The landowners under the system have organized an association known as the Lower Yellowstone Water Users' Association, Mr. B. S. Adams, president, Ridgelawn, Mont. Persons interested in the section can obtain information of local interest by applying to said association.

OREGON: UMATILLA PROJECT.

The Umatilla project embraces 20,000 acres immediately south of Columbia River and east of Umatilla River. The engineering work in connection with this project consists of a feed canal from Umatilla River to the Cold Springs reservoir, and a distribution system. The works are of simple character and capable of being constructed in a short time. The irrigable area under this project lies below 500 feet in altitude, is rolling in character, and the lands are of high fertility. The climate is warm and the soil adapted to orchards, small fruits, and vegetables. Transportation facilities are excellent, the lands being within 200 miles of Portland, Oreg., or Spokane, Wash., on the main lines of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company.

OREGON-CALIFORNIA: KLAMATH PROJECT.

The Secretary of the Interior, on May 15, 1905, approved the proposed Klamath project. The total irrigable area under this project embraces 236,402 acres, of which 45 per cent, or 106,829 acres, is public land; and 55 per cent, or 129,573, is private lands, 90,000 acres being in California and the remainder in Oregon. The lands are of excellent quality, and alfalfa, wheat, oats, barley, rye, vegetables, and the deciduous fruits are grown successfully. Experiments of the culture of sugar beets show that this crop may become a profitable industry. The project is naturally divided into two distinct parts—the so-called "Upper Project," providing for the irrigation of lands in Langells, Yonna, Poe, and Upper Klamath valleys; and the "Lower Project," which includes the irrigation of lands in Klamath and lower Poe valleys, and the reclamation of Lower Klamath and Tule lakes by drainage. The principal town in the valley is Klamath Falls, Oreg., where headquarters are established for the engineer in charge of the project.

The greater part of the land in private ownership is held in large tracts, and under the provisions of the reclamation act must be sold in small lots, as one person can not purchase water for more than 160 acres. The Klamath Water Users' Association, a corporation of landowners, has been organized to cooperate with and assist the Reclamation Service. The office of this association is located at Klamath Falls, Oreg., where persons interested should apply for pamphlets and descriptive matter. At the proper time settlers may file applications for homestead entries upon available public lands, those located in California being under the jurisdiction of the local land office at Susanville, Cal., while for Oregon, land applications should be filed at the Lakeview, Oreg., office.

Specifications and proposals have been prepared for the construction of the main canal and the auxiliary works, and bids for this work were opened on December 29, at San Francisco, Cal. Actual construction of the system will be taken up as early as possible.

SOUTH DAKOTA: BELLE FOURCHE PROJECT.

When completed, this project will reclaim about 60,000 acres lying northeast of the Black Hills in Butte and Meade counties, S. Dak., tributary to the Chicago and Northwestern and Burlington and Missouri River railroads. Of the total irrigable area it appears that about 50,000 acres is public, or Government, land.

The classification of this land has been completed, and farm-unit maps are in course of preparation. The size of farm unit has not been determined, but will probably be 80 acres of irrigable land, except in the vicinity of the new town site, where the unit may be 40 acres.

Present information is that the major portion of these lands has been filed upon in 160-acre tracts. This being the case, a reduction of each of such entries to one half their present area will be ordered—an action which will make available for future settlement an additional number of entries equal to those already taken up.

Contracts for the construction of schedules 1 and 2 of main supply canal were awarded in April, 1905, and work on them is progressing steadily. On October 26 bids were opened at Belle Fourche, S. Dak., for the construction of the dam and distributing canals of the system. On November 2 the Secretary of the Interior awarded a contract for the work to Orman & Crook, of Pueblo, Colo.

It is expected that the south side canal, which will furnish water to irrigate about 20,000 acres of land, can be constructed in time to deliver some water to this area in 1906. Application should be filed with the local land office at Rapid City, S. Dak., where maps showing the location of the entries will be available for inspection. General information regarding the lands and crops can be had from the president of the Belle Fourche Water Users' Association, Belle Fourche, S. Dak.

UTAH: STRAWBERRY VALLEY PROJECT.

This project provides for the irrigation of about 50,000 acres of land in central Utah, situated from 5 to 15 miles south of Provo and on the eastern shore of Utah Lake. The water supply will be received from a storage reservoir to be built on Strawberry River, about 30 miles to the east of the irrigable area. By means of a tunnel 4 miles long the stored waters will be carried under the divide and emptied into Spanish Fork, from which a canal from 18 to 20 miles long will convey it to the irrigable area. The irrigable lands have a mean elevation of 4,500 feet. Detailed information regarding the lands to be benefited and other facts of interest bearing upon local conditions in the Strawberry Valley may be had upon application to the president of the Strawberry Valley Water Users' Association, Spanish Fork, Utah.

WASHINGTON: OKANOGAN PROJECT.

This project is designed to supply water to 8,650 acres of land in Okanogan Valley, in northern Washington. The water supply is estimated to be sufficient for the proper irrigation of 10,000 acres, 1,350 of which are now supplied. The farm unit has not been definitely decided, but a soil survey is being made, and it is believed that on account of the possibilities for high development in this section the area allowed each settler will be restricted to 40 acres. Lumber for building purposes and fuel supplies is practically unlimited. The lands are tributary to the Great Northern Railroad.

WASHINGTON: YAKIMA VALLEY.

The Yakima Valley contains an irrigable area of approximately 500,000 acres; with storage it is estimated the water supply is sufficient for 340,000 acres. In addition to this acreage there are 100,000 acres in the Yakima Indian Reservation, which can be brought under canals at a moderate cost, but for which there is no late summer flow in the river. The development of a comprehensive system of irrigation in Yakima Valley can be accomplished by the successive construction of several units of a general project, the work being gradually extended to embrace the entire irrigable area.

The Tieton division, which is an integer of the great work projected in the Yakima Valley, embraces an area of about 24,000 acres west of and near the city of North Yakima. The water supply will be from Tieton River, supplemented by waters stored in Bumping Lake.

The Sunnyside division of the Yakima project contemplates the purchase, enlargement, and extension of the Sunnyside canal system now in operation, and in connection therewith the construction of suitable storage works at the upper Yakima Lakes. The Government holds an option on the property of the Washington Irrigation Company. The canal and lateral system contemplated as the first section of the work will irrigate about 40,000 acres of land. Before construction is begun there must be an adjustment of conflicting claims of those who are appropriating water from Yakima River and its tributaries; also a settlement of the suits now pending between the appropriators and the Government in behalf of the Indian reservation, and the satisfactory determination of questions presented by the proposed contract to purchase the Sunnyside Canal. Sufficient acreage must be pledged to secure the return to the reclamation fund of the cost of construction. All of the lands in these projects are tributary to the Northern Pacific Railway.

WYOMING: SHOSHONE PROJECT.

This project, as developed to date, contemplates the diversion of a portion of the waters of Shoshone River, and the construction of an impounding dam at the head of the canyon through which the river flows. The reservoir thus created will have a storage capacity of 420,000 acre-feet. When the project is completed it will be possible to reclaim about 175,000 acres of irrigable public lands. A portion of this area, 122,000 acres in extent, is located on the left, or north, side of the river, and 53,000 acres on the right, or south, side, the whole being about 75 miles east of Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming.

The soil is productive, and hay, wheat, oats, barley, and the hardier vegetables can be produced abundantly with an ample supply of water. The lands are tributary to lines of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway. At the proper time, when the construction of the project is approaching completion, they will be thrown open to homestead entry by bona fide settlers under the homestead laws and terms of the reclamation act. Persons are strongly advised against filing entries prematurely, as the area to be benefited is now arid and incapable of cultivation. It is estimated that water may be delivered by the spring of 1908.

Contracts for construction work have been awarded as follows: On September 18, 1905, to Prendergast & Clarkson, Chicago, Ill., for Shoshone dam and auxiliary works; on September 27, 1905, to Charles Spear, Billings, Mont., for Corbett tunnel and auxiliary works. Construction work is well under way on outlet tunnel, temporary diversion works at the dam, and the Corbett tunnel. It is expected that at an early date proposals will be requested for the construction of a diversion dam across Shoshone River and for the first 9 miles of the main canal.

THE LARGE DAM AT ROOSEVELT, ARIZ.

Mr. DICK. The only project within Arizona contemplates the construction of a large storage dam at Roosevelt, 270 feet high, which will regulate the supply of water for about 160,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Phoenix. This dam can also be utilized to increase the water supply in the Salt River Valley by means of pumping from underground sources. This work has been in process since 1904. There are no public lands available under this project for homestead entry, the entire area having already been reduced to private ownership.

THREE PROJECTS UNDER CONSTRUCTION IN NEW MEXICO.

Three projects are under construction in New Mexico. A dam is being constructed to divert the Hondo River, a tributary of the Pecos, which will make possible the reclamation of about 10,000 acres in the vicinity of Roswell. The completion of this project is expected this year. The land to be irrigated by this project is also under private ownership. Storage reservoirs are under construction on the Pecos River in Chaves County, and the extension of canals previously constructed by private enterprises will irrigate about 15,000 acres of land. Private individuals had made an outlay of more than a million dollars on this project, but a flood in the fall of 1904 washed out a part of the dam and the owners were unable to go on with the work. The Government was appealed to, and in order that property valued at not less than $2,000,000 might be saved from absolute loss the United States is now carrying on the work. All of the land to be irrigated by this project is, however, under private ownership.

A storage dam is proposed for the Rio Grande River opposite Engle, to make a reservoir 175 feet deep at its lower end, 40 miles long, with a storage capacity of 2,000,000 acre-feet, which will, it is believed, irrigate 180,000 acres of land lying in New Mexico, Texas, and Mexico.

About 18,000 acres of irrigated land near Carlsbad, N. Mex., have been without water since the flood of 1904 carried away the dam and other works. The ensuing drought killed many shade and fruit trees and resulted in very great financial loss, threatening the extinction of between two and three million dollars' worth of property.

NEVADA HAS MORE IRRIGATED ACRES THAN BOTH TERRITORIES.

There were 3,867 irrigated farms in Arizona in 1902. It is possible there are 4,000 now, as is claimed. There were in 1902 247,220 acres irrigated. The number in New Mexico was about the same, and Nevada had more than both put together. Taking out the irrigated land in Arizona, which is in Indian reservations, it is not likely that the balance is much greater now than when the census was last taken, when it stood at 185,000 acres.

THESE STORAGE DAMS NEEDED TO IRRIGATE LAND UNDER CULTIVATION.

The only storage dam now contemplated in Arizona will not add to the number of acres under irrigation, for all the water it can store and supply will be needed to adequately irrigate the acres already under cultivation, or which have been prepared for cultivation. There will be little inducement to much immigration into Arizona, because all the land which can be irrigated has already been taken up, and the only farms to be obtained are by subdivision of farms already under cultivation. There are no broad acres in Arizona adequately supplied with water which are to-day open to homesteaders. The roseate optimism which sees a million acres under cultivation in Arizona in a few years and a population of a million souls has its appropriate place only in the literature of land boomers and real estate speculators, but will not bear close scrutiny or fair mathematical application.

THE TIDE OF AMERICAN MIGRATION SWEEPS TO THE NORTHWEST.

The present trend of the American pioneer is across the Canadian line into the fertile and unoccupied fields of the Canadian northwest. The freezing and inhospitable climate of the extreme north even now has, and will continue to have, greater inducements for the American farmer than the arid sands lying under the semitropical skies of Arizona, where the thermometer frequently stands for hours at over 100°, and where the thirsty sands swallow up the largest floods in a very short time. Admit a possibility of 1,000,000 irrigated acres in Arizona and divide that acreage into 40-acre tracts and allow four persons to each farmer's family, and the result is only 100,000 people.[a] This result is based on the theory that land reclaimed by the Reclamation Survey will be so productive it will lead to intensive farming and small farms. The history of irrigation in Nevada negatives this theory, for the irrigated farms there average 252 acres. It is true they are much smaller in Arizona, but even there they are twice as large at present as in New Mexico.[b]

ARIZONA CLOSELY RESEMBLES NEVADA.

The State which most resembles Arizona in topography, in soil, in resources, in possibilities and probabilities is Nevada. We are glad Nevada is in the Union. She has ever been represented in this Chamber by distinguished statesmen. She is now rapidly growing in population, and recent marvelous discoveries of gold there give promise of a return of her former prosperity. Nevada is, however, without doubt much the richer of the two in mineral wealth. She has twice as much land under cultivation by irrigation. She has all the advantages Arizona enjoys, and more, and promises greater development, and yet she is the only State in the Union with which Arizona can to-day be fairly compared.

NEARLY ALL ARIZONA'S TIMBER IS GOVERNMENT RESERVE.

The industries of Arizona are mining, agriculture, and stock raising, and are of importance in the order named. The lumber interest is considerable, but 95 per cent of the timber land is included in Government reservations. It stands third in point of copper production of the mining districts of the United States and fourth in the whole world.[c]

UNCERTAINTY OF THE MINING INTEREST.

Nothing, however, is more uncertain than the mining interest. That has been the experience in Arizona and it has been the experience elsewhere. The State of Nevada made multimillionaires out of its early mine operators, and the State gave promise of containing a large population. In time, however, the principal mines gave out and the population dwindled, and Nevada had fewer people at the last census than it had thirty years before.

HER GOLD AND SILVER OUTPUT HAS STEADILY DECREASED.

Arizona has suffered these very vicissitudes in its mineral production. In 1882 the value of gold and silver mined in the Territory was $8,565,000. For the next ten years the annual output dwindled steadily until it had decreased to $2,550,952. Since then the output has gradually increased. In 1903 it reached the figure of $6,186,634 and in 1904 fell to $4,935,478, an amount three and a half million dollars less than the output of 1882.

THE DECAY OF TOMBSTONE.

In the testimony taken before the Senate Committee on Territories in 1902 it appeared that very few of the mines around Tucson were then in operation, because of the fall in the price of copper and the cost of freight. The famous Silver King mine, which is said to have produced nine million of bullion, was not worked then on account of the low price of silver. Tombstone, as has been said, was then a small village, having dropped from 12,000 people to as many hundred.[a] It had once been a great mining camp, but the ores became exhausted or it was unprofitable to work them, and decay followed.

ARIZONA'S GOLD AND SILVER OUTPUT.

The total value of the gold and silver production of Arizona from 1885 to 1904 was:

1885	$4,711,000
1887	4,709,297

OFFICIAL ADMISSION OF THE SPECULATIVE CHARACTER OF MINING.

The governor of Arizona, in his last report, says (page 7):

A persistent and successful effort is being made to take mining in Arizona out of the category of purely speculative—"gambling"—pursuits.

This statement practically admits all that can be said of the uncertainties of the mining interests in the Territory.

FLUCTUATIONS IN PRICE OF COPPER.

Probably no member of this body has had more experience with mines and mining than the Senator from Montana, and he testified last month before the House Committee on Territories that there is no way to determine actually the real value of a mine until you get the ore out and realize on its value, for, he says, what seems to be a valuable mine to-day may to-morrow disappear entirely, and what seems to be a most promising vein, and which has been worked with great profit, may pinch out within a few feet and become worthless.[a] The fluctuation of values is another element which operates against the value of copper mines. Copper brings 18 cents now, but within a few years past it has been as low as 8 cents. As the Senator from Montana well says, a mine might promise to continue a most valuable property and yet might be dug out entirely in three weeks. The experience of the past should caution us against granting statehood to a Territory whose principal industry is mining. While New Mexico is not as great a mining camp as Arizona, and the annual mineral production there does not now exceed $3,000,000, there is every reason to believe that, as the governor of New Mexico says in his last report, sooner or later New Mexico must become as great a producer of mineral wealth as the Commonwealths similar in geological, mineralogical, and topographic features—Colorado, Arizona, and Mexico—on its immediate borders.

AGRICULTURE THE BEST FOUNDATION FOR GROWTH.

In New Mexico agriculture still leads in the value of its annual products. Statistics show that 41 per cent of the people engaged in gainful occupations are following agricultural pursuits. Colorado, which has dazzled the world with the richness of its gold and silver mines, was long regarded of little value except as a mining camp, but notwithstanding the magnificent mineral production of that State, the annual production of its mines does not equal the annual product of its farms. The gold production in Colorado last year represented $29,000,000, but the corn, hay, potatoes, and other products were worth more than forty millions. Silver reached a high value last year, and the output of that precious metal from the mines of Colorado aggregated $11,000,000.

COLORADO A GREATER FARMING THAN MINING STATE.

The orchards and the sugar-beet patches of Colorado did better than this by one and one-half million dollars. The $5,000,000 worth of lead marketed did not exceed the value of the lambs shipped from that State, so that while the whole value of the mineral output of the State was $43,000,000, the farms were worth much more, for they produced an output which was worth $70,000,000.

Agriculture is the only durable basis of a great State, and agriculture depends on water, which in Arizona is so scarce that it can only fertilize a very small proportionate amount of the land.

NO MANUFACTURING COMPARATIVELY IN ARIZONA.

Witnesses from Arizona admit that the manufacturing interests of the Territory are yet to be developed, and it is plain to anyone who investigates the subject that the future of manufacturing is very uncertain. The Federal statistics of manufactures for the year 1900 show capital invested in Arizona at $10,157,408, in New Mexico $2,638,786, while the value of the output in Arizona was $21,315,198 and in New Mexico $5,605,795. While the manufacturing output of Arizona seems a splendid figure, yet it is but a trifle, for even the District of Columbia, where there is practically no manufacturing, returned an output valued at $47,667,622.[b]

The latest report of Bradstreet's Commercial Agency gives the number of business houses in Arizona at 1,765, in New Mexico 1,795, total number 3,560; in Indian Territory 6,942, in Oklahoma 10,142, making a total for the new State of Oklahoma of 17,054—a figure that exceeds even the number of busines houses in the State of Arkansas, where the figure is 14,438.

NO RACIAL DIFFERENCES AS ALLEGED.

Strenuous objection is made against joint statehood with New Mexico because of alleged racial differences. The inhabitants of New Mexico are referred to as an entirely different people. They are called foreigners, Spaniards, Mexicans, and even by the opprobrious epithet of "Greasers." It is charged that nearly one-half the people of New Mexico are Mexicans, who to an overwhelming extent do not understand or speak the English language. The aspirations, ambitions, and interests of these people are said to differ from those of Arizona. One witness, a professor, said that—

To force Arizona into a union with New Mexico is to do a great wrong to the people of the former Territory, who in racial antecedents, religious preferences, and industrial interests are wholly unlike the inhabitants of New Mexico.[a]

One witness patronizingly declares that the people of New Mexico are good people, but "they are not like our people." It is charged that in New Mexico an interpreter is present practically all the time in the courts and frequently in the schoolroom for the purpose of carrying on conversation and taking procedure.[b]

Another witness says that more than a majority of the population of New Mexico is Mexican without question, and declares from being present at a half dozen sessions of the legislature at Santa Fe that a majority of the members were Mexican, and in every case, whenever there is a legislature held, it is necessary to have a Spanish interpreter to interpret the remarks from Spanish into English and from English into Spanish.[c]

It is declared that the union of these two Territories will make an unfit and even an unholy alliance, and will cause the Americans of Arizona to be subject to Greaser or Mexican domination.

ANGLO-SAXON VERSUS LATIN.

Another witness, a reverend gentleman, declares that the Latin race predominates in New Mexico and the Anglo-Saxon in Arizona. Even he, however, is compelled to bear witness that the New Mexicans of Spanish descent are an exceedingly conservative people, if they do prefer to live according to old-time traditions. He admits that they are quiet, orderly, inclined to obey the laws; that they follow instead of trying to lead, and have been used by both political parties instead of attempting to dominate in conventions. Most of them, he says, are Roman Catholics, a quiet, orderly, law-abiding people, not difficult to govern and not difficult to handle.[d]

FOUR-FIFTHS OF NEW MEXICANS SPEAK ENGLISH.

These aspersions against the native-born citizens of New Mexico who are of Spanish descent are based partly upon prejudice and partly upon ignorance. These unfriendly estimates given by zealous advocates of single statehood for Arizona greatly overstate the proportion of New Mexicans of Spanish descent. Mr. Rodey, late Territorial Delegate, and who is as familiar with the situation as any living man, declares that not more than two-fifths of the inhabitants of New Mexico are of Spanish descent, and of that number at least half speak English.[e]

NEW MEXICANS OF SPANISH DESCENT MAKE GOOD CITIZENS.

The governor of New Mexico, in his last annual report to the Secretary of the Interior, dated September 15, 1905, estimates the population of the Territory on July 1, last, at 300,000, of which number he says 158,000 come from other States and Territories or are descendants of such, 125,000 are of Spanish or Mexican descent, and 13,000 are Indians. While his estimate of the total population is undoubtedly high, he practically agrees with Mr. Rodey as to the proportion of the different elements of the population of that Territory. This two-fifths element of Spanish descent has lived under the American flag for sixty years, a period covering practically two generations, and all of them, except a comparatively small per cent, were born within the Territory after it was incorporated into the Territory of the United States. These Americans of Spanish descent are very superior in character to the average of the people living south of the Rio Grande, except probably not to exceed twenty to thirty thousand people who are almost entirely devoted to sheep herding, and these are a good, honest, pastoral people, vastly superior to much of the immigration that is daily pouring onto our shores through the gates of Ellis Island. Since the Territory passed from Mexico to the United States their numbers have been added to very little by immigration from the south.[f]

NEW MEXICO TAKING ON NEW LIFE.

New Mexico has taken on new life and is becoming as aggressive and up-to-date as the rest of the United States. The larger towns have electric-light plants; there are two electric street railroad systems; all the larger towns have water works; two cities have free mail delivery; there are three rural mail routes; good roads are being built; beautiful homes are being constructed. On every hand is evidence of prosperity, of civic spirit, and public and private progress.

HIGH CHARACTER AND STERLING WORTH OF NEW MEXICANS.

Every person who has appeared before either committee of Congress investigating this subject, and who has testified on this particular point, bears testimony to the high character and sterling worth of this element in the population of New Mexico. They are, beyond question, as good citizens as can be found elsewhere in the United States.

Col. Ira M. Bond testifies as follows:[a]

I say they are quiet, orderly, and, as a rule, more honest in proportion than the common class of people or the lower class of people in any State of the Union. We have no strikes out there or anything of that kind. The people are very industrious, and they have been so for three hundred years. They have been taking care of themselves, and not only have they been supporting themselves, but they have supported the Army of the United States through contracts.

ALWAYS READY TO FIGHT FOR THE FLAG.

Major Llewellyn, an officer in the President's regiment during the war with Spain, pays this tribute to them:[b]

The Mexican people of that Territory, gentlemen, are sound on all of these great propositions that touch the hearts of the American people and in which we are all interested. There is not a more patriotic, there is not a truer, there is not a more loyal people in the world. I have lived among them for twenty-one years. My neighbors are Mexicans. It can be said about them—I say it to them myself—that if there is any fault to be found with them, it is that they are not a progressive people. But they have been a balance wheel in our legislature. The only two counties in the Territory where they voted a bonded indebtedness, which hangs upon our necks to-day, are counties that are controlled by Americans. That was done before this Harrison Act, or the Springer Act, whichever you choose to call it, was passed, which stopped it.

There has not been a time since New Mexico was part of the United States when our people have failed to respond to a single call on the part of the National Government. During the war of the rebellion, while it may have passed from the minds of many people, there were two considerable battles fought in the Territory of New Mexico. General Sibley invaded New Mexico from the south, coming up the Rio Grande. At Val Verde there was a desperate battle fought. The Union forces were defeated, and General Sibley passed on up the Rio Grande. He met his defeat up at a place called "Glorieta," in Santa Fe County.

The question is, Who defeated him? Was it the troops sent from Ohio, Illinois, or Kentucky. No; it was the native troops of the Territory of New Mexico. Many of them gave up their lives in defense of their country there, and are buried there to-day.

In our war for the liberation of Cuba these Americans of Spanish descent were as zealous to enlist under the Stars and Stripes as the citizens of any other part of the country or of any other strain of descent. They are peaceable, orderly, law-abiding citizens; they have shown their willingness to die for their country; they are certainly worthy of enjoying the full benefits of American citizenship.

ALL THE PEOPLE BECOMING FULLY AMERICANIZED.

It is stated that every Spanish newspaper published in the Territory carries the headline:

It is the duty of every father to see that his children learn the language of the country, and that is English.

Many of the leading citizens of New Mexico are of mixed Spanish and American blood. Hundreds of such intermarriages have taken place, and nobody considers it in a disparaging way any more than thousands of unions which daily take place in this country between other Americans of different nationalities.[c]

MANY OF THE PEOPLE SPEAK ENGLISH AND SPANISH.

Mr. Rodey further declared that no county in the Territory is Spanish-speaking, in the usual sense, because, while many people speak Spanish, they also speak English, and while their language in their own hamlets would be Spanish, they are familiar with the English tongue. Recent railroad construction has brought during the past few years a large influx of English-speaking people. Of all the population of the Territory, he believes three-fourths, and perhaps even more, can speak English.

Another witness declared that 75 per cent of the Mexican people talk English, but they will not talk it unless they have to, preferring Spanish in their own family circle and among themselves, which results in confining the common use of English to the younger element. These are found in large numbers in every county, town, and village. They learn the English language very rapidly; in fact, the school attendance in the Mexican precincts of Albuquerque is better than in the American precincts. This witness adds significantly that the native Mexicans had been practically free from vice until dominated by worthless Americans coming in with railroad construction.[d]

THE RISING GENERATION ALL SPEAK ENGLISH.

Another witness, an American of Spanish descent, said that about 80 per cent of the rising generation speak and write English. They have not, however, had until recently the excellent school facilities they now possess, and on account of the conservatism of the older natives and the difficulty of communication and the sparsely settled country opportunities and incentive to learn English have not been plentiful until recently. It is quite probable that among the older natives of the Territory of Mexican descent the majority do not speak English. The same condition, however, exists now in New Mexico that is found in every other part of this great country, where persons of foreign descent congregate, in the universal acquisition by the rising generation of the English tongue.[a]

NEW MEXICANS FAITHFUL AND TRUSTWORTHY.

While illiteracy is a condition to be anxiously avoided and should be reduced to the minimum, yet it is neither a vice nor a crime, and is often accompanied by the possession of the most sterling virtues. It is the universal experience that New Mexicans of Mexican descent are honest, conservative, and patriotic. They are quiet and peaceable; they are faithful workers and true to their word; they are trustworthy in every sense, possess a high sense of integrity, and pay their debts. It is said that most of the merchants there would rather trust a Mexican than an American.[b]

ARIZONA'S SPLENDID SCHOOL SYSTEM.

The people of Arizona take just pride in their school system, which is admittedly one of the best in the country. One witness calls attention to the wonderful increase in school population, teachers' salaries, and school property in that Territory from 1894 to 1904. He says:

In 1894 our school population was, as I have said, 15,383; in June, 1904, the school children numbered 27,395, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. The teachers in 1894 were 293 in number; in 1904 they had increased until there were 550. The salaries paid in 1894 were $138,546; in 1904 the salaries paid school-teachers amounted to $258,469. The school expenses in 1894 were $176,039; in 1904 they were $394,392. The value of school property in 1894 was $401,896; in 1904 it has increased to $883,479. In every line, very nearly, an increase of 100 per cent.

ENGLISH COMPULSORY IN NEW MEXICAN SCHOOLS.

The Arizona Teachers' Association, by resolution duly adopted, has declared joint statehood would disrupt the foundations of the entire educational structure of that Territory and would be inimical to the public schools as well as to every other interest of their people. Major Llewellyn is again a competent witness as to school conditions in New Mexico. He says, with just emphasis, speaking of the school system of New Mexico:[c]

I want to tell you it is the pride of our Territory, and the pride of our people. We have the most advanced and most progressive school laws of any State or Territory in the United States. We have absolutely compulsory education. * * * The teaching of the English language in the public schools of the Territory of New Mexico is compulsory, and the teaching of Spanish is not permitted and is not taught in a single public school of the Territory of New Mexico. That law was passed by the Mexican people of the Territory of New Mexico.

Teachers of the third grade of New Mexico employed in the interior country schools must, under their statute, possess a knowledge of both English and Spanish, and all are required to pass an examination in the English language.

COMPARATIVE SCHOOL STATISTICS FOR 1903.

The latest official figures, the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1903, shows the following comparison:

School enrollment, Arizona, 20,608; New Mexico, 37,972.

Average daily attendance, Arizona, 12,125; New Mexico, 26,065.

Average duration of school days, Arizona, 128; New Mexico, 88.

Total number of teachers, Arizona, 474; New Mexico, 793.

Total expenditure, Arizona, $397,972; New Mexico, $360,531.

Public high schools, Arizona, 4; New Mexico, 9; their teachers, Arizona, 14; New Mexico, 31; students, Arizona, 236; New Mexico, 526.

While Arizona spends more money for school purposes and has more school days, the percentage of attendance to enrollment is much higher in New Mexico than in Arizona.

THE UNITED STATES HAS NEGLECTED EDUCATION IN NEW MEXICO.

The superintendent of public instruction in the Territory claims that New Mexico directly taxes her people more per capita for the establishment and maintenance of public schools than four-fifths of the older States of the Union. Had the United States taken as much interest, he says, to educate the Spanish-speaking people in New Mexico as it has to educate the natives of Porto Rico and the Philippines, New Mexico would to-day rank with the most enlightened communities of the United States. In fact, more attention has been paid to the education of blanket Indians than to the Americans of Spanish descent in New Mexico.

ALBUQUERQUE.

Albuquerque has five magnificent brick schoolhouses, costing thirty to forty thousand dollars each, besides half a dozen other institutions of learning and a university enrolling 1,250 pupils. It is strictly an American city, with seven to eight thousand people. They have waterworks, electric-light and gas plants; they have a sewer system and fire department, railroad shops, mills and factories, and good stores, and the city is the center of a large wool and mining district.

Albuquerque schools are as good as schools throughout the country east or west. Many Mexicans living in the surrounding country are anxious to send their children there, and the knowledge of English is growing rapidly. Mexicans, as a rule, wish to have their children learn the English language, even if they can not speak it themselves.

NEW MEXICAN SCHOOL SYSTEM COMPARATIVELY MODERN.

It is true that the New Mexicans have been somewhat backward in public education. The public school system there dates only from 1889, and while the older class of New Mexicans of Spanish descent are largely illiterate because of lack of school facilities, the schools there now are as good as anywhere and the younger generation is learning English.

MR. RODEY'S TESTIMONY.

Mr. Rodey said, in his testimony before the House committee:

Now, you have heard a good deal in the arguments here about a school system, and I want to say that Arizona is not one bit superior to New Mexico in that respect. We have a school system second to none, and a system in our cities equal to that in Boston. We have a University of New Mexico, two great normal schools, the school of mines, a military institute, and a half a dozen other sorts of institutions and schools, and splendid public common schools in every city, town, and village in the Territory, besides the mission and denominational schools. We have splendid schoolhouses, and we spend more than $1,000,000 a year in one way and another for their support. We have a few communities in the outlying districts where the educational system is not what it ought to be, where they have not got as good schools as they ought to have. In my town you will find a school system that Massachusetts could well be proud of, and it amuses me to hear the people from Arizona brag of their superiority. We have just as good a school system as they have in Arizona and better in some parts of our Territory. We have $2,250,000 worth of school buildings alone, with 350,000 people raising nearly $1,000,000 a year for their support. What do you think of that?

ARIZONA IS MEETING SOME OF THE VERY SAME PROBLEMS.

The governor of Arizona, in his last annual report, speaks of the educational situation in the Territory and the problems which confront them. The compulsory-education law is obeyed, he says, almost without exception by American parents; but, notwithstanding the law, it appears the Mexican children are growing up in ignorance. They cling persistently to the Spanish tongue, though the children have a smattering of English and can speak it when it is absolutely necessary. He declares that the race has great possibilities, that educated citizens of Mexican descent are prominent in business and the professions and are a credit to the Territory.

GOVERNOR OF ARIZONA ADMITS NO NEED TO FEAR THE NEW MEXICANS.

He declares that the uneducated citizens of Mexican birth or descent look upon Americans as a numerically predominate race, aggressive, pushing, and superior, and many of them feel a timidity in the presence of Anglo-Saxons and prefer to live by themselves and follow their own customs. In view of this testimony of Arizona's governor, how insincere is the alleged fear of the Spanish-Americans of New Mexico.

THE BUGABOO OF MEXICAN DOMINATION.

Yet some of the bitterest opposition on the part of Arizona to joint statehood with New Mexico is the alleged fear of being Mexicanized, as they call it, by the more numerous population of the latter Territory. What they complain of especially is the presence on juries of Mexicans who can not speak English and require an interpreter. One witness even goes further and fears that the population of New Mexico, being controlling, might make the Spanish language the court language of the whole of the new State. Such an extreme view, of course, is absolutely ridiculous, for these same witnesses holding these extreme views can not explain why if the foreign element predominates in New Mexico they speak the English tongue and compel English to be taught in their schools. Another witness says that they desire in Arizona to carry on their procedure in their courts in the English language, and do not wish to be compelled to have upon their juries people who do not speak or understand English. He says, "We derive our procedure from the common law, while New Mexico conducts her legal affairs under the civil law, which is in existence there to-day." This sounds like an echo of the objection raised thirty years ago, that Colorado would be a Mexican State, while, as a matter of fact, there is not a State in the Union to-day which is more truly American in all the elements which go to make up a great Commonwealth than is Colorado. We are proud of her broad plains, of her magnificent mountain ranges, and her health-giving climate. Her mineral production has been the wonder of the world, and her representatives in this body, from the time of her admission to the present hour, would reflect luster upon any State. The fear of Mexican domination is an utterly groundless one. The Americans in New Mexico of Anglo-Saxon and of Spanish descent get along splendidly together.

JURIES IN ARIZONA WILL REMAIN ENGLISH SPEAKING AS BEFORE.

There has been absolutely no race legislation, and no repressive or unjust laws have been passed directed against any element of its population. One would think from reading some of the testimony of these unduly agitated people from Arizona that the immediate and direct result of joint statehood will be a tremendous influx into the western part of the new State of Americans from New Mexico who can not speak English and who will insist upon the right to sit upon their juries. There is no statute in New Mexico which confers the right to sit on juries to people who can not speak English, but in some counties where a majority of the people have been Spanish speaking they have furnished jurors mainly, it appears, because they enjoy the occupation and because the English-speaking Americans are too busily engaged in private matters to have any desire to act in such capacity. Not over 5 per cent, it is said, of the population of Arizona are unable to speak or read English, and not over 6 per cent, it is said, of the native whites of all races are illiterate. If this bill becomes a law, the courts in the western end of the State will continue as now to have only English-speaking jurors, and those counties in New Mexico where the people of Spanish descent predominate can continue, as now, to employ them upon juries and make use of interpreters where it is necessary for the administration of justice. There seems to be no complaint from New Mexico about the character of their juries. Witness after witness testified to the splendid character of these jurors of Spanish descent. A lawyer of experience testified that he never knew a fairer jury than one made up of these people, and he does not believe a better class of jurors could be found.

JUSTICE ADMINISTERED SATISFACTORILY IN NEW MEXICO.

There is ample testimony that the administration of justice in New Mexico compares favorably with the adminstration of justice in other States and Territories. These native people stand for law and order, for good government and good citizenship.

One of the judges of the Territory declares that no court ever held by him had administered justice more satisfactorily than some held by him where the services of an interpreter had to be freely used. Statistics show that there are many States in which the proportion of foreign-born, non-English-speaking people is much larger than in New Mexico. There are members of this Congress who address their constituents in French, German, Norwegian, and other languages. There are cities in this Union containing districts where more people speak a foreign language than the number of inhabitants of New Mexico, who can speak no other tongue but Spanish.

INTERPRETERS USED VERY LITTLE NOW IN NEW MEXICO.

The use of interpreters in the New Mexican legislature was once necessary, but that condition has long since passed away. The present Territorial Delegate from New Mexico, Mr. ANDREWS, says there are twelve counties in New Mexico that are American by a good majority; five so-called native counties, where Spanish-speaking people predominate, and five that are divided. He agrees with Mr. RODEY that 50 per cent of the poulation are of Spanish descent and 50 per cent pure American. Four-fifths of the natives, he says, speak English. He has traveled all through the Territory and very seldom met a native who could not talk English. He was in the council three years ago, the last but one, and there were five natives to seven Americans. The house had eleven or twelve natives to twenty Americans. The legislature, he declared, would average three or four Americans more than natives, as a rule. He himself has been in the Territory for twelve years and all the legislatures that have met in that period have had a majority in the lower house of so-called Americans. He does not know of a member who sat in a legislature that he had anything to do with who could not speak English. He adds his testimony to sustain the fact that they are competent legislators and most excellent citizens. The counties bodering on Texas are inhabited almost entirely by whites who have moved over from that State.[a]

THEIR LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES MADE UP OF ENGLISH-SPEAKING CITIZENS.

Mr. RODEY says that three years ago he wrote a Senator here that there had been little or no need of an interpreter in the legislative assemblies in New Mexico for ten years past, as every member of both houses understood and spoke English reasonably well. There will be no need of an interpreter, he said, in the coming legislative assembly, which is the one which met last. He gave the political complexion of that body, stating that the upper branch was unanimously Republican and all scholars of a high order, and that the house was composed of twenty-one Republicans and three Democrats, every one of whom spoke English. He stated further that the use of interpreters is generally decreasing, and that while the office exists in many counties and is filled in some political conventions, yet there is little or no absolute use for it, but the nominations are frequently made as a compliment to some prominent citizen to whom it is desired to give some recognition.[a]

ALL COURT RECORDS KEPT IN ENGLISH.

Mr. Rodey has been in the Territory since 1881, and is a lawyer by profession. He says he has never heard of but one instance where a jury called for an interpreter, although they are still in use to some extent in eight or nine counties. All the court records are kept in English, although it appears that there are some justices of the peace who keep their records in Spanish. They attend to the litigation between the Spanish-speaking natives, and it is only natural that the records should be kept in the same tongue that is used by the parties to such petty litigation as comes before a justice's court.

THE LEGAL CODES IN THE TWO TERRITORIES MUCH ALIKE.

The charge that in New Mexico the civil law controls instead of the common law, which prevails in Arizona, is entirely unwarranted. The Code of New Mexico is much like the Code of California, New York, and Texas.[b] The code of practice is modeled upon the same codes as is the Code of Arizona. The statutes of New Mexico make a body of as good legislation as the legislation enacted for Arizona. There is some little difference between the laws of the two Territories, owing to some different local conditions, but this difference amounts to very little. This is no place to make a comparison between the common law and the civil law, but it is only necessary to say that the civil law was a polished and finished product, while the common law was still in a rude and barbarous condition, and that a very large number of the best features of the common law are derived from the system of law which was the greatest gift Rome gave to the world. The law of irrigation is found laid down in one of the pandects of Justinian, and was a well-settled practice before common law had its birth. If a larger element of the civil law has crept into the statutes of New Mexico than into the statutes of Arizona, it is no proof of an inferior legal advancement.

EACH TERRITORY CAN RETAIN ITS LOCAL STATUTES.

As far as the local statutes of the two Territories are concerned, it has been well said that there is no reason why they should not be continued in existence until the legislature of the new State shall have ample time to consider the needs of the new Commonwealth and decide upon the best code of laws to be adopted.

THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT SUSTAINS THIS VIEW.

If it were true, as is not the case, that these two Territories have different codes of law, the one legal system based upon the common law and the other based upon the civil law, it does not follow that either Territory must be required to give up its own peculiar system. Both can be maintained and can exist side by side in the new State. There is no question about this proposition, for it has the inferential support of the Supreme Court itself. In Missouri v. Lewis (101 U. S., 22) the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Bradley, said:

> There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any State from adopting any system of laws or judicature it sees fit for all or any part of its territory. If the State of New York, for example, should see fit to adopt the civil law and its method of procedure for New York City and the surrounding counties and the common law and its methods of procedure for the rest of the State, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent its doing so. * * * If diversities of laws and judicial proceedings may exist in the several States without violating the equality clause in the fourteenth amendment, there is no solid reason why there may not be such diversities in different parts of the same State. * * * If a Mexican State should be acquired by treaty and added to an adjoining State or part of a State in the United States and the two should be erected into a new State, it can not be doubted that such new State might allow the Mexican laws and judicature to continue unchanged in the one portion and the common law and its corresponding judicature in the other portion.

ANGLO-SAXON AMERICANS NATURALLY LEAD IN POLITICS.

As to the native New Mexicans being clannish or domineering or disposed to impose the civil law or the Spanish language or any other Latin institutions upon their Anglo-Saxon neighbors, it appears from the testimony that whenever the "Americans," so-called, have one-third of the voting population of any of the counties they have been able to control the politics of that county, simply because the native American takes naturally to politics and is a born political organizer and leader, and they have no trouble in electing English-speaking Americans to the offices and controlling the administration of county and municipal affairs.[a]

MOST STATES HAVE CONTRIBUTED EQUALLY TO THESE TERRITORIES.

An analysis of the origin of immigration into these Territories shows how foolish are the fears imagined by the people of Arizona. The native white population of native parentage in Arizona by the last Federal census was 44,830, of whom 12,427 were born in the Territory. The corresponding numbers for New Mexico are 149,029 and 119,529, leaving comparatively the same number in both Territories who came into them from other States. The following States contributed persons to Arizona and New Mexico, respectively, as follows:

NO RACIAL LINES WILL BE DRAWN.

Some Arizona people tell us they fear they will be swamped and overwhelmed, their most sacred interests utterly ruined, and their future blasted by the hostile union against them of the Americans in New Mexico of Anglo-Saxon descent and those of Spanish blood. Who are the Americans of New Mexico of Anglo-Saxon descent who will combine against their brothers in Arizona? We well know that racial antagonisms are strong and that racial ties make the warmest bonds of union. The sons of Alabama in Arizona equal the sons of Alabama in New Mexico. Will these brothers wrong each other? The Arkansans in Arizona and New Mexico are about equal. Will these in New Mexico combine with aliens in blood to the prejudice of the sons of their own mother State? The same figures hold true as to Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Virginia, and I might enumerate other States which have contributed practically equal numbers of their sons to help build up these new Territories. These men, coming from the South, and the East, and the North, and the Northwest, are as closely united to-day in blood and sympathy and aspirations as before they left the boundaries of their native States. They are Americans! It is utterly preposterous to claim that the native-born Americans of pure American strain will combine with any foreign strain to the injury of the brothers of their own flesh and blood.

The number of United States pensioners June 30, 1904, in New Mexico was 1,970; in Arizona, 757. These recipients of a grateful nation's bounty are men who marched together under their country's flag to fight the battles of the nation or are their widows and orphans. Who believes that they will be arrayed against each other in the new State to the injury of the best interests of the people of the present Territory of Arizona?

The same may be said of the citizens of foreign birth in these two Territories. They seem to have proved about equally attractive to immigration. The citizens of French birth in Arizona about equal those of French birth in New Mexico. The same is true of the German born, of the Irish born, the Italian, the Scotch, and the Swedes.

The number of those of Latin descent who might be expected to coalesce with the Spanish descended citizens of New Mexico, with whom they are more closely allied by race, is so insignificant as to amount to nothing.

THE TWO TERRITORIES ABOUT EQUALLY ATTRACTIVE TO IMMIGRATION.

As a matter of fact, these two Territories have proved, as was said before, about equally attractive to Americans and foreign-born citizens, looking for new homes. Subtract from the foreign born in Arizona the large number of her citizens born in old Mexico and the numbers for Arizona and New Mexico are about the same. There are many more Texans in New Mexico than in Arizona. The same is true of Colorado, but Utah and California and Nevada, which bound Arizona on the north and west, have gone in much larger numbers into that Territory.

THE RACE ARGUMENT IS BASED ON PREJUDICE OR IGNORANCE.

The entire argument, or rather the attempted argument, made in behalf of Arizona, that she will be affected most detrimentally in all her interests by so-called Mexican domination, is based upon prejudice or ignorance, and is absolutely without foundation.

THE NEW MEXICANS ALWAYS LOYAL TO THE UNION.

Many witnesses agree that from two-fifths to one-half the population of New Mexico are of Spanish descent, but one-half of them speak English and they are all respectable, law-abiding, industrious people, and most excellent citizens. This so-called "foreign element" in the population of New Mexico can not prove dangerous to the so-called "purer strain" of Americans who inhabit Arizona. If racial antagonisms are to appear after the union, then the Americans of New Mexico and the Americans of Arizona will naturally combine against the people of Spanish extraction in New Mexico, and will be able to outvote them two to one. There is no reason, however, why there should be any fear felt of the Spanish-speaking people of New Mexico. They were loyal to the Union during the war between the States, furnishing 6,500 soldiers to the Federal side, and at least 1,000 of them enlisted and served their country in the war with Spain. They are patriotic citizens, true to the Union, and furnish an element of our population of which no citizen of the country need be ashamed.

THERE IS HARMONY IN RELIGIOUS BELIEFS.

There is harmony in their religious beliefs. The New Mexicans are largely Catholics. A prominent citizen of Arizona, in his testimony before the Senate committee, declared one-half the population of that Territory, or 70,000, were church members, of which number 40,000 were Catholics. (S. Doc. No. 16, p. 132.)

THE ALLEGED GREAT DISTANCES TO BE TRAVELED.

Further strenuous objection to the jointure is made because of the great distance which it is contended will have to be traveled in order to go to and from the capital of the new State, which the bill fixes at Santa Fe, in New Mexico, until 1915. It may thereafter be permanently fixed by a vote of the electors of the new State. The committee examined this question and found the position not well taken. The State will be in form rectangular and much more compact than are the present States of Texas, California, and Montana, and when the question of distance is examined it is found that at the present time there are portions of each of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona quite as inaccessible with reference to the Territorial capitals as will be the center of population in Arizona to the center of population in New Mexico under this bill.

OTHER STATE CAPITALS MORE REMOTE TO SOME CITIZENS.

The distances to be traveled in the new State of Arizona are less than in some other States of the Union. From Prescott or Phoenix to Santa Fe is about 420 miles. From Sacramento, the capital of California, to the southernmost city in that State is considerably over 500 miles, while from Austin, the capital of Texas, to El Paso, at the extreme west of that State, the distance is 580 miles, and from Austin to the north line of the same State is 540 miles. Portions of the southwest corner of the State of Colorado are much more distant in hours of railroad travel from Denver than is Phoenix from Santa Fe. The western portion of Nebraska is quite as distant from Lincoln, the capital of that State, as is Phoenix from Santa Fe. The same can be said of portions of Montana with reference to Helena, the capital of that State, and that portion of the State of Idaho bordering upon Canada at the north is much more inconveniently situated as to matter of distance from Boise, the capital of that State, than is Phoenix from Santa Fe. In fact, it was stated before the committee in the House that the people of Arizona have ceased to urge this distance question as a serious objection to the jointure because these comparisons show that the position is not well taken. With modern facilities for travel and the railroads that now exist in New Mexico and Arizona and the postal facilities that are extended over the two Territories, it is quite as easy to communicate from one portion of either Territory to the other as it was fifty years ago to communicate from one portion to the other of the smallest New England State.

An objection urged against the jointure is that the Territories are divided by the Continental Divide, which was alleged to be a natural barrier of such character as to render joining the two Territories under a single government very inconvenient.

The fact is that the Continental Divide is entirely in New Mexico, east of the boundary line between New Mexico and Arizona, and varies in distance from the boundary line from more than 100 miles down to about 30 miles.[a]

The general elevation of New Mexico, except small areas in the extreme southern part, is 4,000 feet or more above the sea. Within the Territory the mountains lose the characteristics of the Continental Divide and become a series of detached masses, which sink into rolling formations and spread out into mesas and tablelands. The Continental Divide here is a low hump with approaches 150 miles wide on each side; the apex in the pass, or low pass, being all the way from 4,000 to 7,500 feet above sea level. It is crossed at the present time with four railroad lines, with others in course of construction. The center of New Mexico averages about 1 mile high, so that this additional elevation near the Territorial line is approached so gradually as not to impede travel to any great extent. There are two or three divides east of the Continental Divide and west of it within these Territories that are greater obstacles to travel and railroad building than the Continental Divide itself. The Santa Fe railroad is spending a large amount of money and has almost completed what is known as the "Belen Cut-off," which is a piece of railroad 250 miles long, running from Belen, N. Mex., on to the Texas line and avoids two of the worst divides—the Glorietta Mountains and the Raton Mountains. The Flagstaff and the Bill Williams divides west of the Continental Divide, are both more of an inconvenience to travel than is the Continental Divide itself. The railroads now crossing the Territorial line are the Phelps-Dodge line, which skims along the extreme south line of New Mexico from El Paso westward, to the Bixby, Douglass, and Canenea copper country. Next is the Southern Pacific, which crosses some 75 or 100 miles farther north at Steins Pass. Next is the Lodsby and Clifton, which crosses the Territorial line at an elevation of 5,500 feet, some 30 miles north of Steins Pass. Next is the Santa Fe Pacific, which is now the west end of the Santa Fe system and it crosses the Continental Divide at an elevation of 7,200 feet, and the Territorial line west of Fort Wingate at a somewhat less elevation. Other lines are projected but none of them at present cross the boundary line.

THE TAX RATE.

It is admitted that property in these two Territories is assessed for taxation at a very low rate. A prominent Arizona witness complained of New Mexico for not levying just and fair taxes, because he said the property in that Territory is assessed at less than 15 per cent of its value.[b] If this is a crime, then Arizona is in no position to find fault with her sister

[a] Hearing before House Committee on the Territories, 1906, p. 161.
[b] Hearing before House Committee on the Territories, 1906, p. 125.

Territory. Much of the railroad mileage of Arizona is exempt from taxation; the object of that exemption is declared to be the encouragement of the development of the country. The mines are not assessed at fair valuation for fear it will prevent capital coming in to develop other mines.

LOW TAXES LEVIED IN ORDER TO ATTRACT CAPITAL.

Taxes in the Territory are admittedly low, but witnesses declare that if they add any more to the assessed value of their property, it is going to drive away capital from the Territory into some other Territory where it is better treated.[a] The assessed valuation of property in Arizona has been raised the past few years so that it now exceeds the assessors' valuation of property in New Mexico. The total valuation for taxation is actually lower to-day in New Mexico than it has been in the past, although the wealth has steadily increased. There is every reason to believe that elective officers, directly responsible to the people, will change this condition of affairs for the better.

RAILROAD INTERESTS OPPOSE JOINT STATEHOOD.

If there are any interests in Arizona and New Mexico which are enjoying special privileges by reason of their low taxation, it is natural to look for these interests in the ranks of those who oppose a statehood bill. One of the transcontinental lines extending across the State a distance of nearly 400 miles pays to the Territory $175 per mile in lieu of all other taxes. This annual payment per mile represents a 2 per cent tax rate upon a valuation of $5,833.33 per mile. This same railroad, when it crosses the boundary line into California, is taxed at the rate of $14,000 per mile, and another railroad, which is assessed for taxation in New Mexico at about $7,000 per mile, when it crosses the line from New Mexico into Texas is taxed by that State at $17,000 per mile. More than that, a census bulletin says that these railroads have a commercial value of $39,000 per mile.

RAILROADS AND MINES GROSSLY UNDERVALUED FOR TAXATION.

A similar undervaluation exists in the case of mining properties. The governor of Arizona, in his annual report, says it is conceded by estimates made by the most conservative experts that the mines of that Territory have not been assessed in the aggregate at 5 per cent of their value. The actual value of the railroads in Arizona, as going concerns, is estimated to be about $68,000,000. They are assessed for taxation at about six millions, or about 9 per cent. In the Territory of New Mexico the figures are eighty-six millions and eight millions, showing the value for taxation is, in both Territories, about 9 per cent of the actual value. This proportion between the actual value and the tax value in the case of Arizona mining properties is even more disproportionate. One mine whose annual output is said to be $3,000,000 is assessed for taxation at less than $1,000,000. The great lumber interests in these Territories are opposed to joint statehood, and it is charged that their properties are grossly undervalued for purposes of taxation. The stock raisers, whose cattle graze unchecked over the wide public domain of these two Territories, are naturally opposed to the bill, because it would put a stop to their free use of the public domain.

THE CONTINENTAL DIVIDE LITTLE HIGHER THAN ITS APPROACHES.

The so-called "Continental Divide" is an elevated table-land which is approached from the east by such gradual and easy ascent that it is hardly noticeable. At all points it is many miles east of the boundary line between the two Territories. The river systems, which have made parts of Arizona blossom and produce and grow rich, and but for which life in that Territory would be impossible, take their rise in New Mexico or are fed by tributaries from that Territory. The Gila River, which furnishes the largest quantity of water for Arizona, drains 14,000 square miles in the Territory of New Mexico, an area much larger than the States of Maryland and Rhode Island combined. The two Territories, therefore, are bound together with the strongest of all bonds, the streams of life-giving water.[b]

MAY ONE STATE IMPOUND THE WATERS OF AN INTERSTATE RIVER?

The question is now pending in the Supreme Court, but has not yet been settled, as to the right of one State to impound the waters of a river flowing through its boundaries into another State. New Mexico, because of its Territorial condition, has been at the mercy of the State of Colorado, which has constructed dams impounding the waters of the Rio Grande.

THE GILA RIVER A STRONG ARGUMENT FOR JOINT STATEHOOD.

The Geological Survey has noted that one of the obstacles to the storage of water on the Gila River is that that river rises and 125 miles of its course are in New Mexico, and irrigation projects intended for Arizona might be imperiled by the storage of the water of that river within the limits of New Mexico. What stronger argument or what better reasons could be presented for the union of these two Territories into one State?[a]

Make these two Territories one State and no such complication will arise, because the entire length of the Gila River, from its source in the mountains of New Mexico to where it joins the waters of the Colorado River, will be within the confines of one State.

The Great Designer of the universe, instead of contriving to separate these two Territories, may rather be said to have intended to unite them by placing the headwaters of the Gila River in one Territory and its main channel in the other. The Gila River is the very lifeblood of Arizona, and the two Territories should be united so no conflict of jurisdiction may arise over it.

MOUNTAINS NOT NATURAL DIVIDING LINES.

Mountains have never been used as the dividing line of American States. The Green Mountains divide Vermont, the Alleghenies bisect Pennsylvania, the Rockies lie like a shadow across Colorado, Wyoming, and Montana, and the Sierras form the backbone of California.

Whoever urged that these States should be divided by the mountains which raise their heads within their boundaries? It is urged as an objection to uniting these two Territories that the waters of one drain into the Pacific and of the other into the Atlantic. Such an objection is purely sentimental. Watersheds are not natural boundary lines any more than mountain ranges. The streams of Ohio flow in opposite directions—some of them to the north and empty down the St. Lawrence River to the Atlantic, and others to the south to the Gulf of Mexico.

THE REQUEST OF ARIZONA TO BE LET ALONE.

We have heard in the hearings before committees of Congress on this question that all Arizona desires is to be left alone. They do not ask, they say, to be admitted to statehood now, but they ask to be permitted to work out their own salvation. Congress can not, with justice to the Union and the Territories themselves, leave the question of statehood alone, as far as it applies to these Territories.

THE TERRITORIAL CONDITION SHOULD COME TO AN END.

Arizona has had over forty years of organized Territorial government in which to work out its destiny and fit itself for statehood. It has failed completely to qualify itself for admission to the family of States as a single State. The most reliable estimates of the population of Arizona to-day do not indicate a population of American citizens much more than one-half the ratio required for representation in the House of Representatives. The excuse is made on behalf of Arizona that her progress has been retarded by her Territorial condition, and it is said that that condition means lack of stability of legislation, because of the veto Congress has over all legislative acts of Territorial legislatures—a veto which it very rarely exercises—and the indisposition of capital to seek investment in a Territory. They tell us that the Territorial condition keeps out money and keeps out immigration. The marvelous growth of Oklahoma since it was first opened to settlement seventeen years ago is the best and the unanswerable argument to this claim. The Territorial condition was no bar to the marvelous development of Oklahoma. It is doubtful if that Territory would have grown more in population and wealth and in all the things that go to make up a great State had it enjoyed the full rights of statehood. A constant tide of immigration westward, which has marked the history of this country since colonial days, has been affected little, if any, by forms of government. Where the natural conditions invited immigration there it went, whether the new country was a Territory or was one of the States of the Union.

JOINT STATEHOOD THE ONLY SOLUTION FOR ARIZONA.

It is said that stocks and bonds issued under a Territorial government will not bring as high prices as when issued under State government. Oklahoma, however, sells its bonds under the most favorable conditions. It could scarcely do better after being admitted to statehood. Admitting, however, that the Territorial condition does prevent the largest possible growth, it is time that condition should cease. If territoryhood is intolerable it should be succeeded by statehood. If the Territory has not yet qualified itself for statehood, and Arizona does not claim it has, the time has come, after forty years of unsuccessful striving, to make some other disposition.

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO HAVE NEARLY EVERYTHING IN COMMON.

These two Territories are located in the same latitude and longitude; they were for a number of years part of the same

[a] Hearing before House Committee on the Territories, 1906, p. 109.

Territory; they were both acquired from Mexico, partly as a result of the Mexican war and partly as a result of the Gadsden purchase; their industries are much the same; their development and progress have been much alike. There are many States already in this Union which have a greater mixture of nationalities than will be the case in the new States proposed by this bill. Such differences of nationality have heretofore been found to be a source of strength rather than a source of weakness, and there can be no reasonable question that this will be the result in the union of these two Territories. Nor is it a question alone of what the people of Arizona want, but quite as much what the people of the entire United States want. The people of the forty-five States of the Union have as much interest in the organization of new States as have the inhabitants of these Territories which it is proposed to take in as States. We make bold to say that the eighty or more millions of people within the Union have the absolute right to say whether or not new members shall be taken into the sisterhood of States. We say further that no action of any preceding Congress can bind the judgment or authority of this Congress as to what is the best action to be taken on this proposition. The people of Arizona have no more inherent right to be taken into the Union as a single State than have the people of New Mexico or the people of the Indian Territory or of Oklahoma.

THIS IS A QUESTION FOR THE UNION NOT THE TERRITORIES TO DECIDE.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] laid down this principle in his remarks made in this body on the statehood bill a year ago. I can not hope to state the principle more convincingly than he did when he said:

> The admission of a State into the Union is intended for the benefit of all of the people of the United States rather than for the benefit of the inhabitants of an area or territory that is included in the limits of such a State.

If the question of joint statehood is left to a majority vote of either Territory then one more than half the voting population of Arizona might defeat the project, against the unanimous vote of the people of New Mexico and the preponderating sentiment of the country, which we believe opposes single statehood for these two Territories—a proceeding wholly without precedent since the formation of the Union.

CENTER OF POLITICAL POWER SHOULD BE NEAR THE CENTER OF POPULATION.

By the census of 1900 the population west of the Mississippi River was 20,888,342, while the population east of the Mississippi River was 55,906,273. We do not believe the child is yet born who will see the center of population cross the Mississippi River. We do not say that the question of maintaining any equilibrium should be considered in passing upon this bill, but if the question of equilibrium is permissible and there is any equilibrium which should be preserved, it is certainly that of people and not of area.

THE CLAIM OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY FOR SEPARATE STATEHOOD.

The almost unanimous sentiment in favor of creating a single State of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory must not close our eyes to the fact that over 50,000 people in the Indian Territory voted last year to adopt a constitution for a separate State, and these people elected a Delegate to Congress who is asking for admission to Congress. Among the claims contained in the memorial presented by those representing the bill to make the Indian Territory a separate State is the claim that the United States has, by its legislative and administrative acts, pledged separate statehood to the Indian Territory.

The Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, created by act of Congress March 3, 1893, and known as "The Dawes Commission," which was appointed with a view to terminating the tribal condition in the Territory and allotting the lands in severalty to the various members of the Indian tribes, operated under a statute which contained a provision looking to statehood. The Commission was to treat with the various Indian nations and tribes "with a view to such an adjustment, upon the basis of justice and equity, as may, with the consent of such nations or tribes of Indians, so far as may be necessary, be requisite and suitable to enable the ultimate creation of a State or States of the Union, which shall embrace the lands within the said Indian Territory."

THE IMPLIED PROMISE IN THE CURTIS ACT.

The Curtis Act, passed June 28, 1898, contained the following paragraph with reference to the continuance of the tribal form of government:

> This stipulation is made in the belief that the tribal governments so modified will prove so satisfactory that there will be no need for further change till the lands now occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes shall, in the opinion of Congress, be prepared for admission as a State of the Union.

The various treaties made with the different tribes of Indians by which they were removed to the Indian Territory provided that they should not, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory.

ARIZONA HAS NO STRONGER CLAIM FOR SEPARATE STATEHOOD.

All guaranties and promises made by these treaties have been repeated time and time again by Federal legislation and new treaties. The agreements made with the various Indian tribes by the Dawes Commission all seemed to contemplate that the territory occupied by the Five Civilized Tribes should, in the course of time, be admitted to the Union as a State. The same arguments made by representatives from Arizona against being joined in statehood with New Mexico are set forth with nearly, if not even greater, force by these petitioners representing the proposed State of Sequoyah.

EDUCATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE STATE OF ARIZONA.

Now, as to the blessings which come from this bill, your committee is of the opinion that this enabling act is a very beneficial one for the new State. It grants four sections of land per township to the common schools and makes specific donations to public buildings and educational institutions. The entire land grant to the new State, including that already granted to New Mexico, is somewhere between twenty and twenty-four millions of acres. The bill also grants to the new State as an inviolate common school fund, the interest only to be used for the maintenance of the schools, of $5,000,000. While the quantity of land thus given is large, its quality is not to be compared with that given to the new State of greater Oklahoma, and is not of great value in that it is doubtful if the entire grant is worth more than half as much as the much smaller quantity of land given to Oklahoma. It has been calculated, however, that the rentals from these lands and the interest on this money, together with such portion of licenses and fines and other revenues as the new State may find it convenient to turn into the school fund will bring in at least a million and a half dollars per annum to the new State, and, as it will have but about 105,000 children at the start to attend its schools, the committee feels safe in saying that it will not be necessary to levy any school tax at all in the new jurisdiction. It is considered that this will be a blessing which the inhabitants will fully appreciate. It is also considered that the expense of maintaining one State government instead of two State governments, which would have to be maintained had separate statehood been conceded to these Territories, will be much less proportionately and that the new State government can be maintained at about one and one-third times the cost which either one of the governments could be maintained for separately.

A VERY LOW STATE TAX POSSIBLE.

It has been suggested that perhaps the entire State government could be maintained by the levy of a moderate franchise tax upon all the corporations in the new State, and that it certainly could be maintained if to this should be added a portion of the licenses, fines, and revenues from other sources, so that the suggestion which is made by the people from both New Mexico and Arizona that taxes could be limited in the new State constitution to one-half of 1 per cent on the assessed valuation is perhaps not a wild prediction. It is said that in the combined Territories there is at the present time property subject to taxation amounting to at least $700,000,000. One-half of 1 per cent levied upon this would raise ample revenue for the support of the new State government. It has been ascertained that each of the Territories for one reason and another have been accustomed to return but about one-tenth to one-eighth of the actual property they possess for purposes of taxation, the result being that the tax rate in each Territory is extremely high, and thus keeps out capital and retards progress.

On the whole, it will thus be seen that the blessings to come to the people of these two Territories from this jointure far outweigh the objections that have been urged to it.

JOINTURE FAIR TO THE NATION AND FAIR TO THE TERRITORIES.

Your committee is of the opinion that the jointure is fair to the rest of the nation and fair to the people of these Territories.

There is no prospect that these Territories will increase in population as fast as the older and more populous States, or that Arizona will, within any reasonable period, have a population sufficient to justify her admission as a separate State. The question of the admission of these Territories has taken up much time in both Houses of Congress and full and fair hearings have been given. The matter should be disposed of now and finally, and be settled in the best interests of the entire Union.

OPPOSITION WILL GROW LESS IN TIME.

Two or three years ago the union of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory was more bitterly opposed than is now the union of Arizona and New Mexico. The opposition was even more general, for very considerable influences in both opposed the union of these two Territories. More careful consideration of the question has greatly modified, if not completely removed, this opposition, and public opinion very generally approves the proposed new State of Oklahoma. It is almost universally recognized that the best interests of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory require their merger and their admission as one State.

We believe that equally strong reasons urge the union of New Mexico and Arizona, and that the opposition to their merger will in brief time melt away as completely as has the opposition to consolidating the two other Territories.

THE TERRITORIAL CONDITION SHOULD END.

It is claimed by some of the witnesses from Arizona that Arizona would prefer to retain the Territorial form, absolutely, indefinitely, forever, rather than to be joined with New Mexico. It is said that nature abhors a vacuum. A Territory within the interior limits of the United States is like a vacuum, a condition which is at variance with our whole theory of government, and one which should be brought to an end as soon as possible. It was never the intention of the founders of our Government that any portion of the United States should forever remain a Territory. If, then, there is an organized Territory which, after fair opportunity, has not yet fitted itself for statehood, Congress should, in its wisdom, make some other provision therefor. We believe that the best interests of all concerned demand the passage of this bill.

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO CAN LIVE IN HARMONY.

The committee does not for one instant credit the assertion that these two Territories have so little in common, differ so in race, government, ideas, and political ambition, that they can not unite harmoniously under one government and become reconciled each to the other. We deny that they are separated by any political, natural, racial, or religious barriers.

DIFFERENCE OF RACIAL ORIGIN NO BAR TO HARMONY.

Arizona has more citizens of foreign birth than has New Mexico. Arizona at the last census contained twice as many Mexicans as did New Mexico. We resent the idea that these American citizens of Spanish descent, who have lived under our flag in New Mexico for sixty years, are any less patriotic, any less devoted to our flag and our institutions, or are less worthy of citizenship than millions of foreigners who have come to us within the past sixty years and have freely amalgamated with our citizenship and to-day constitute some of the most substantial, prosperous, and patriotic of our citizens. If, however, as charged, there is a predominating alien element in New Mexico, that is all the more reason why the so-called "purer American strain" of Arizona should be united to it, in order that there may be an element in the new State which will Americanize the whole mass.

CONGRESS DECLARED IT MIGHT CHANGE ARIZONA'S BOUNDARIES.

The fact that so many acts of Congress organizing Territorial forms of government express the right of Congress to alter the boundaries thereof and divide the Territory or attach any portion of said Territory to any other State or Territory does not add one iota to the absolute power of Congress to do what seemed best when such Territories were admitted as States. Even if such an expression did not appear in so many words in the act providing a Territorial form of government for Arizona, that was not an abdication by Congress of any of its power in the matter, was no guaranty of future action, was no pledge, either legal or moral, in the least binding upon its successors. Congress, however, expressly declared it might change the boundaries. We propose to alter the boundaries of Arizona to take in the entire Territory of New Mexico, and thereby exercise the power expressly set forth in the Territorial act which divided these Territories in 1863. Even though no such reservation had been set forth in that act, Congress can not be indicted for breach of faith or moral turpitude every time it changes its policy. Congress has changed its policy in a hundred matters and many hundred times. It changed its policy as to slavery, it has changed its policy on the tariff time and time again, it has changed its policy on the question of finance and questions of banking—on hundreds of important questions it has had a different policy for different generations and under differing conditions. The question for this Congress to decide is what disposition can be made of this question which is for the best interests of the entire Union.

THIS CONGRESS HAS ABSOLUTE POWER TO DECIDE THE QUESTION.

The provisions of the ordinance of 1787 were never extended to this Territory. The obligations entered into by this country with France under the Louisiana Purchase did not extend to this Territory. The only obligation, contract or otherwise, which does apply, is that already referred to, contained in the treaty with Mexico of 1848, and the extension of these provisions to the Gadsden purchase. These instruments provide that the people whose allegiance was thereby transferred to the United States shall "be admitted at the proper time (to be judged of by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution." The entire disposition of that question is thus placed where the Constitution says it shall be placed, in the discretion of Congress, and this Congress or any other Congress which shall finally pass upon the question has full power to control the matter, unhindered by any expression or resolution or action of any preceding Congress.

MEN, NOT ACRES, CONSTITUTE A STATE.

In that immortal poem, which has stirred the souls of so many listeners, and which has been recited by nearly every schoolboy, the question is asked, "What constitutes a state?" and the answer is, "Men." That has been the rule—if there has been any rule—since our Constitution was adopted. The first standard—if standard it can be called—was that established in the ordinance of 1787, fixing the population required for admission at 60,000. That was twice the Congressional ratio under the first apportionment, and while the first States organized out of the great Northwest Territory were admitted with less than 60,000 people, there was not one of them which did not possess more people than the Congressional ratio, or approximately as many. As the population of the country has increased and the Congressional ratio has grown, so has the standard of admission to the Union kept pace steadily with both. My colleague, in his able address delivered in this body three years ago on the statehood bill, quoted from a report made to the Senate February 18, 1858, by the Senator from Illinois, Stephen A. Douglas. It is so pertinent to this occasion that I take the liberty of quoting it again:

STEPHEN A. DOUGLASS ON THE REQUISITES FOR ADMISSION TO THE UNION.

While the Constitution of the United States does not, in terms, prescribe the number of inhabitants requisite to form a State of the Union, yet, in view of the fact that representation in the House of Representatives is to be in the ratio of Federal population, and that each State, no matter how small its population, is to be allowed one Representative, it is apparent that the rule most consistent with fairness and justice toward the other States and in harmony with the general principles of the Federal Constitution is that which, according to the ratio of population for the time being, is sufficient for a Representative in Congress. A reference to the debates which have occurred in all the cases touching the sufficiency of population in the admission of a State will show that the discussion has always proceeded on the supposition that the rule I have indicated was the true one; and the effort has been, on the one side, to prove that the proposed State had sufficient population, and on the other, that it had not the requisite numbers to entitle it to admission in substantial compliance with that rule. (Page 55, minority report by Mr. Douglas, February 18, 1858, Senate reports, first session Thirty-fifth Congress.)

That, we maintain, has been the rule and is the true rule, and the few departures therefrom only emphasize the excellence of that rule and the necessity of adhering strictly to it. The same principle was laid down by Benjamin Harrison when a member of this body in the debate over the admission of Oregon. He said:

BENJAMIN HARRISON SET FORTH THE SAME RULE.

It is worthy of remark here that in this debate it was conceded on both sides that the possession of a population equal to the ratio of representation in the House of Representatives was all that could be demanded of a Territory applying for admission.

The experience, however, of Utah, which was not admitted until it had a population of over 200,000, shows that Congress has, in that instance at least, demanded something else than mere population.

NATURE HAS LIMITED THE POSSIBILITIES OF IRRIGATION.

Opposition to the admission of New Mexico and Arizona to separate statehood is based upon the official records as to the resources of those Territories and upon the conservative estimates of experts as to the probabilities of their future development. In a report from the Director of the United States Geological Survey, read in this Chamber a year ago, Mr. Walcott made a recapitulation of the possible acreage which might be reclaimed for irrigation in New Mexico and Arizona, from which it appeared that it might be possible, in the next decade or generation, to bring under irrigation 750,000 acres, and the conclusion he reached was that it was only reasonable to expect that there will be opportunities afforded to furnish homes for a million white inhabitants.

PROMISES OF TWENTY YEARS AGO STILL UNREALIZED.

Nearly twenty years ago in the Annual Report of the Governor of New Mexico for 1887, Governor Ross claimed that at least one-half the area of New Mexico is susceptible of a high state of cultivation and successful farming. Notwithstanding that nearly two decades have passed since that statement, very few more acres of land are irrigated in New Mexico to-day than then, and the Director of the Reclamation Service tells us that the probable limit of cultivated area in these two Territories is 1 per cent of their area.

MOST OF THIS LAND WORTHLESS FOR NATION BUILDING.

It is not area that fits for statehood. Alaska has more square miles than the entire Mexican acquisition, it has belonged to us nearly forty years and has not yet received even a Territorial form of government. So these two Territories along the Mexican boundary line possess a vast area, but they include much land, even a great preponderance of land, that is worthless for purposes of nation building.

Life in Arizona is practically dependent on the water courses, and they are few. Vegetation exists only where there is irrigation, and cattle can not graze more than 5 miles away from water. The cultivated and inhabited areas must continue to be narrow ribbons of life scattered here and there over broad and arid deserts, where no life exists and can not be maintained because of lack of water. The cultivated portions of Arizona must continue to be so small in comparison to the entire area of the Territory as to be almost inappreciable.

JOINT STATEHOOD DOES FULL JUSTICE TO THESE TERRITORIES.

In view of all these facts, in view of the known and limited water supply, which rigorously limits cultivation and marks absolute boundaries to future development, the committee feels that it has done full justice to the people of these Territories by providing for joint statehood.

THEIR POPULATION SMALLER, RELATIVELY, THAN THAT OF MOST NEW STATES.

An estimate made by the Senator from Vermont in his speech in this Chamber three years ago on the omnibus statehood bill shows conclusively that the population of Arizona and New Mexico to-day bears a much smaller proportion to the total population of the United States than did the population of most other Territories at the date of their admission. It is not enough to say that Arizona has to-day more people than Nevada or Wyoming or Idaho at the date of their admission. The population of the whole country has grown remarkably all these decades, and while the growth of these two Territories in the last decade was greater than the total growth of the nation at large, they have failed utterly to keep up with the growth of the nation, they have fallen behind in the race, and it has not been on account of contested and overlapping Spanish land grants, it has not been caused by bloodthirsty and marauding Indians—it has been because these two Territories are under a semitropical sky and because nature has denied them the blessings it has bestowed so freely upon more favored spots of the country.

THIS NOT A SECTIONAL OR PARTISAN QUESTION.

This is not a sectional question, and it should not be a partisan one. There is no desire on the part of any member of this committee to humiliate or degrade the people of Arizona; there is no desire to deprive that section of our great country of its just influence in both Houses of Congress, but we do insist that a new State admitted into equal fellowship in the Union of States should bear some proper proportion to the population and wealth and resources of the other States; that the center of political power of this country should remain somewhere within reasonable distance of the center of population and the probable center of population for all future time. If mistakes have been made in the past, we should see to it that no mistake is made now.

NEW STATES SHOULD APPROACH THE AVERAGE OF THE OLD STATES.

Considering not the present conditions alone, but looking to the future and its prospective development, the country has a right to demand that new States should not be hopelessly below the average of the other States in the Union.

ONCE UNITED THESE TWO TERRITORIES WOULD NEVER DIVIDE.

We believe further that if the new State of Arizona is admitted, as was Texas, with permission to divide, that privilege would never be exercised or availed of.

THE BEST INTERESTS OF THE WHOLE UNION DEMAND JOINT STATEHOOD.

Oklahoma will make a grand State. It is on a par with the average of the States already in the Union. Why take in two other States which, separately, would be mere striplings compared to her? Why not have two States as strong as we can make them? In both cases we only propose to reunite what was once one. The best interests of the whole Union, justice to the 80,000,000 people living east of the west line of Kansas, justice to the people of these Territories, require that one strong State be made out of the remainder of our Mexican acquisition.

OKLAHOMA WILL RANK WITH THE FIRST HALF OF THE STATES.

This bill, then, proposes to admit as one State the Territory of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, with an area approximating the area of the States around it, except Texas to the south, neither so small as the smallest west of the Mississippi nor so large as the largest, and with a population of a million and a half of souls, or about the average of the forty-five States. When Oklahoma takes its place in the Union and is placed in the column according to population, wealth, and resources, there will be more States below it than above it, and, by reason of its magnificent agricultural resources, its mineral wealth, developed and undeveloped, its stone, oil, and gas, and other wealth producers, the new State is bound to pass even other States which now outrank it.

HER ADMISSION A STRONG ARGUMENT AGAINST SEPARATE STATEHOOD FOR ARIZONA.

Had the policy been followed in this case which has formerly been followed by Congress, these Territories would have been admitted as separate States. Each Territory is larger than are ten of the present States. Each has a much larger population than was required of any State on its admission to the Union. All the precedents favor admitting them as two States. By reason, however, of the tribal state still existing among some of the Indians, and which will not terminate until next month, the Indian Territory was not prepared for admission as a State. In the meantime public sentiment has been crystallizing and taking definite shape in the conclusion that these two Territories should be admitted as one State.

TIME WILL JUSTIFY THE PASSAGE OF THIS BILL.

There is a general feeling that Congress has, at some time in the past, been hasty in conferring statehood where the recipient was not then and has not since equalled to or approached anywhere near the other States in population. While, by all standards heretofore applied, Oklahoma has for many years past been qualified for admission to the Union, there has been a growing feeling that it should not be taken in until the Indian Territory was ready also to be admitted, and that they should be taken in as one State instead of two. Oklahoma was carved out of the original Indian Territory. It is proposed by this act simply to reunite what was once undivided. When the suggestion was first made it met with little favor in either Territory. Probably the overwhelming preponderance of sentiment in both was strongly opposed to such union. It was but natural that this feeling should exist. Both Territories are populated by active, nervous, ambitious, enterprising Americans, with as large a proportion as exists in any State of men anxious and qualified for political honors. In both Territories are bustling, thriving, booming towns qualified and anxious to be the sites of State capitals and of the numerous State institutions which American States possess. To unite these two Territories into one State meant to reduce by one-half the possibility of each citizen for the gratification of his political ambitions and to reduce by one-half the possibilities of these towns to secure the public buildings or institutions they longed for. It was natural, therefore, that the proposition of joint statehood for these two Territories should at first be looked at unfavorably. As time has gone on, however, and the force of public sentiment throughout the country has made itself felt, this opposition has died down, the advantage of having one strong, big, powerful State has impressed itself upon the people of these two Territories, and it is admitted on all hands that the people of both Territories support this measure and desire the creation of the great State of Oklahoma.

JOINT STATEHOOD IS BEST FOR THE INDIANS.

The passage of the provisions in this bill relating to Oklahoma and the Indian Territory will bring disappointment to some persons. Congress at one time passed legislation which contemplated maintaining the Indians as a separate entity within the nation, having in view organizing them into a separate and distinct State. It is now apparent to all, however, that the higher destiny of the Indian and his greatest progress lies in a breaking up of the tribal relations and making him a citizen of the United States. The white man has been invited into the Indian Territory, or has gone in there without invitation, until to-day the Indians of pure blood constitute but a small fraction of the total population.

It is the duty of Congress to dispose of this question according to its best lights, in view of present conditions, and for the best interests of the entire country. Having regard for all these considerations, and after careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances, it is the practically unanimous sentiment that these two Territories should be admitted as one State.

THERE ARE THE SAME REASONS FOR JOINT STATEHOOD IN BOTH CASES.

The bill also proposes to make one State out of the two Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. Most of the reasons which approve the consolidation of the two Territories into the new State of Oklahoma approve also the consolidation of these two Territories. They have the same history. Both were acquired from Mexico, both were originally settled by Spanish people, both lie for the most part under a semitropical sky and are well within the arid region. They were both originally part of the same Territory of New Mexico, and this bill proposes simply to reunite them. In both agriculture can only be carried on in the main by irrigation, and the agricultural problems of the two Territories are practically the same.

THE SAME TREATMENT SHOULD BE GIVEN BOTH.

If, in accordance with dictates of public opinion, two Territories are to be united to form the new State of Oklahoma, with a million and a half of people, it would be the height of incongruity to admit these two Territories separately. While the combined area of these two Territories will be very large, within 30,000 square miles as large as the imperial State of Texas, yet if you take into consideration the vast areas in both Territories which, by reason of their aridness, through lack of water and the impossibility of ever securing the water necessary to cultivate them, will not be inhabited, the remaining area which can be utilized for cultivation and to sustain human life will not constitute a State which will be disproportionately large.

ARIZONA RANKS VERY LOW AGRICULTURALLY.

Agriculturally considered Arizona to-day ranks with the smallest States of the Union. It is estimated by the United States Geological Survey that by making use of all the water possible to be utilized in these two Territories scarcely over 1 per cent of their immense area can be turned to agricultural profit.

ARIZONA GIVES NO PROMISE OF GREAT INCREASE OF POPULATION.

Since the time the thirteen original colonies organized themselves into the United States of America it has been the rule, with very few exceptions, to admit no new State whose population did not equal or give every promise that it would equal at the next census the ratio fixed by the House of Representatives which determined its membership. The Territory of New Mexico at the last census had a population which approximated the present Congressional ratio, while Arizona contained only about one-half that number, not counting Indians not taxed. While both Territories showed a much higher ratio of growth in the last decade than prevailed in the nation at large, because of the development of agriculture by irrigation, the limit of acres which can be farmed by systems of irrigation now in existence has been reached and even exceeded, so that there is not enough water now available to irrigate all the acres which have been improved, and the acreage can not be increased until immense dams have been constructed to conserve the enormous volume of water which goes to waste in times of flood. The future increase of population in these two Territories depends upon the development of irrigation, which will be at great expense and will require many years to complete.

NO LEGAL OR MORAL OBJECTIONS TO THE UNION.

There are no legal or moral objections to uniting these two Territories. The right to change the boundaries of Arizona when it was taken in as a State was expressly declared in the Territorial act. Congress has frequently changed the boundaries of Territories when admitting them into the Union. Its power in that respect is absolute. No breach of faith can be charged in the action contemplated in this bill.

NO PHYSICAL, ETHNOLOGICAL, OR ECONOMICAL OBJECTION.

No physical, ethnological, industrial, or economical objection can be justly raised against the union of these two Territories.

The so-called "Continental Divide" is no mountain barrier, but a table-land not much higher than the rest of the land in New Mexico. It is pierced several places by railroad lines, and there are other elevations of land within both Territories which present even greater obstacles to railroad construction.

The racial differences between the people of these two Territories are not greater than are found in many States in the Union. The percentage of foreign-born citizens in Arizona is double the percentage in New Mexico, and while New Mexico has a much larger admixture of natives who are of Spanish descent, in the majority these so-called "Mexicans" speak the English language, their children are learning it, and with the advent of railroads and capital these Americans of the Latin race are rapidly becoming Americanized in every sense of the word and are entering upon a new period of development. Their legal codes are taken from the same source and there is no greater difference between the laws of Arizona and the laws of New Mexico than exists in the case of many other States in the Union which lie side by side. In both Territories English is the only language taught in the public schools, and in both attendance is compulsory. These Americans of Spanish descent are patriotic, peaceable, law-abiding citizens; they have gotten along most excellently with their neighbors in New Mexico, and there is no reason to believe that their presence will prove any disturbance whatever in the new State of Arizona. In fact, if any racial lines will be drawn in the new State, which I do not believe possible, it will not be the Americans of Arizona who will suffer any thereby.

ARIZONA CAN WORK OUT ITS DESTINY BEST AS A STATE.

While distances in the new State will be large, they will not be greater than the distances which have to be traveled in some of the other States of this Union, and no greater, considering the present facilities for transportation, than existed in all parts of the country only a few decades ago. In short, we feel confident that the people of the new State of Arizona will get along together just as harmoniously and just as happily as do the mixed strains of blood which exist side by side in so many other States in our country. Arizona does not claim to be entitled to statehood—does not ask it—its advocates simply ask to be given time to work out their destiny as they foresee it and to prepare themselves for statehood.

NATURE HAS NOT BEEN SO LAVISH HERE AS ELSEWHERE.

It is for Congress to say when the Territorial condition shall end. The Territorial state does not confer all the rights of citizenship. It presents some obstacles to the largest development of natural resources, though the experience of Oklahoma and many other Territories proves that the obstacle is far from insuperable, that population and capital and construction of all kinds will swarm where the natural conditions prove inviting regardless of forms of government. All the best interests of the Union, the best interests of the people in a Territory, require that the Territorial condition shall not be prolonged indefinitely. The framers of the Constitution and the statesmen who first faced the problems of government within the Union never intended that a Territory should remain a Territory for a prolonged period of time. It was simply a preparatory state, an expedient which it was expected would be short lived, nor has a long period been required to fit our Territories for statehood. So prolific has nature been, so lavish in bestowing her bounties on the American continent that Territories have soon acquired a population which justified, in the main, admitting them to statehood, and the average period of existence as a Territory has been comparatively brief. New Mexico and Arizona have proved the exception to this rule. Nature did not pour out her bounties so profusely there as elsewhere in the United States. Nature there is not so inviting as elsewhere within the Union. The Stars and Stripes have floated sixty years over nearly all of this area; for nearly that period of time New Mexico has had a Territorial form of government. Arizona has enjoyed a separate existence as a Territory for forty-three years, and still is not prepared to join the Union as an equal partner in its burdens and responsibilities. How many years would elapse before Arizona would have a population approximating the Congressional ratio is uncertain. That time may never be reached.

ARIZONA'S OPPOSITION TO JOINT STATEHOOD WILL RAPIDLY DECREASE.

The new precedent established by the creation of the great State of Oklahoma makes it impossible to be consistent and at the same time admit Arizona to statehood. The Territorial condition, however, is an incumbrance and a hindrance. There is only one course left to follow, and that is to unite the two Territories as is proposed in this bill. It is natural that this proposition should meet with opposition, but the opposition is no stronger than was the opposition at first to the union of Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. A year ago the people of New Mexico were as strong in their opposition. To-day they are perfectly willing to accept statehood upon the conditions herein laid down. While there is still vigorous opposition in Arizona to the proposition, it is considerably less than it was a year ago, and will grow less in time. If this bill is not passed by this session, I believe the next session of Congress will see a very much larger percentage of the people of Arizona favoring this bill than is now the case. If these two Territories are taken into the Union as a new State, present differences will soon disappear, all classes of people and all interests will soon take a just pride in the new State, and even if permission were inserted in the act to divide into two States in the future, under certain conditions as to population, there is no more probability that the new State of Arizona would be divided into two States than that Texas will take advantage of her right to be split up into five States.

THIS BILL WILL COMPLETE THE MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

This bill, then, proposes to make two great States out of the four Territories remaining. It proposes to complete the map of the United States by making every citizen within its broad domain eligible to all the rights, privileges, and opportunities of every other citizen; it proposes to add the last stars which any man within the sound of my voice will see placed upon the field of blue of our national emblem. In the best interests of the people of the entire Union, in the best interests of the people of these Territories, this bill is presented with the firm belief that it should pass and become a law.

THE PROMISE OF STATEHOOD SHOULD NOW BE KEPT.

We believe that the promise of statehood made to the people of these two Territories nearly sixty years ago should now be kept. The Territorial condition is temporary and should be terminated at the earliest practicable moment. We believe that every acre of this broad country, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and extending from Mexico to Canada, should be on an equal footing and enjoy equal opportunities under the law. We believe no discrimination should be made against the citizens of any section or corner of this broad area. We believe the time has come when every square mile of this territory should enjoy the privileges of statehood and be represented in this body. The time has come to settle, and to settle forever, the status of these Territories and of their inhabitants. Arizona has not qualified itself for statehood, and the only alternative is to join it to New Mexico. Arizona has not now the population which entitles it to admission, and it is doubtful if it ever will. It would be at least unfair, if not injurious, to the interests of the Union and to the interests of the people of these United States to admit the present Territory of Arizona on an equal footing with the other States.

ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO ALIKE IN MOST THINGS.

These four Territories are all that remains of that immense section of land in the southwestern part of the United States not yet admitted to statehood. The four Territories are bounded on the north by the same parallel of latitude and they stretch in unbroken line from Arkansas to California. Arizona and New Mexico were formerly part of Spain's domain in the New World, and both belonged to Mexico at the time she gained her independence. They were part of the same territory until 1863, when the present division was made. They have the same climate, their grazing interests are similar, agriculture in both depends on irrigation, in both are the same natural difficulties, the same problems to meet. Arizona has greater mineral wealth, but New Mexico is richer in coal deposits. They lie side by side for a distance of 390 miles, a greater distance than the width of either Territory.

THE PRESENT DIVIDING LINE WILL SOON BE FORGOTTEN.

If I were a citizen of Arizona, as I am a citizen of Ohio, and had I the confidence in the future of that Territory as have those who have come from Arizona to Washington to oppose this bill, I would support the bill most heartily, believing that by the next census—or, at the latest, by the census taken after that—Arizona will have a larger population than New Mexico, and all fear of domination by the so-called "foreign element" of that Territory will have passed utterly away. There is absolutely no danger of that to-day. The fear is groundless. Before that time comes—and it may come as soon as the most ardent well-wishers of Arizona predict—the old boundary line will be only a memory. Every citizen of the new State of Arizona will be proud of its vastness, and in all that broad domain every citizen will be working shoulder to shoulder to advance its interests and to increase its wealth, its influence, and its power, and all will bless the day which saw this bill made into law.

JOHN GIBBON.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 690) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Gibbon captain and quartermaster in the Army.

Mr. NELSON. Before that bill is taken up, I ask unanimous consent that the statehood bill be temporarily laid aside, so that it may remain the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 690) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Gibbon captain and quartermaster in the Army.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the President, in his discretion and upon such examination as he may prescribe, to appoint John Gibbon, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Volunteers, to the grade of captain and quartermaster, United States Army, to fill the first or any subsequent vacancy in that grade in the Quartermaster's Department occurring after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF GEN. JAMES MILLER AT PETERBORO, N. H.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 38) for the erection of a statue to the memory of Gen. James Miller at Peterboro, N. H. It is a bill that passed the Senate during the last Congress.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $5,000 for the erection of a statue, in bronze or granite, to the memory of Gen. James Miller, the hero of Lundys Lane, at Peterboro, N. H.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAM ACROSS RED LAKE RIVER, MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4128) permitting the building of a dam across the Red Lake River at or near the junction of Black River with said Red Lake River, in Red Lake County, Minn.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It grants consent to William J. Murphy, his successors and assigns, to build a dam across the Red Lake River at or near the junction of the Black River, so called, with Red Lake River, in Red Lake County, Minn., for the development of water power, and such works and structures in connection therewith as may be necessary or convenient in the development of and the utilization of the power thereby developed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW CORDELL, OKLA.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1695) legalizing the removal of the county seat of Washita County, Okla.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the substitution of the House bill, which, after passing the House, came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks that the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7139) legalizing the removal of the county seat of Washita County, Okla., and that the bill be substituted for Senate bill 1695. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 7139) legalizing the removal of the county seat of Washita County, Okla., and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It ratifies and confirms the action of the majority of the electors of Washita County, Okla., as determined by an election held on the 7th day of August, 1900, for the purpose of removing the county seat of that county from the town of Cloud Chief to the town of New Cordell, and declares the county seat of the county to be at the town of New Cordell.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill No. 1695 will be indefinitely postponed.

MONUMENTAL COLUMN AT PRINCETON, N. J.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 333) in regard to a monumental column to commemorate the battle of Princeton, and appropriating $30,000 therefor. A similar bill has passed the Senate many times before.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I shall move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Jersey proposes to move to strike out the preamble. That will necessitate a change in line 5, by striking out the word "said" and inserting "the Princeton Battle Monument Association."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the word "by," strike out the words "said association" and insert the words "the Princeton Battle Monument Association;" so that the bill will read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Princeton Battle Monument Association under the direction of the Secretary of War, to aid in erecting and completing, on the battlefield of Princeton, in the State of New Jersey, a suitable monument: Provided, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be available until the Princeton Battle Monument Association shall have raised an additional sum of $30,000, to be expended in the erection of said monument and in the purchase and improvement of the site: And provided further, That the design for said monument shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

MISSOURI RIVER DAM.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4130) to authorize the Capital City Improvement Company, of Helena, Mont., to construct a dam across the Missouri River.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 9, after the word "them," to insert "and approved by the Secretary of War;" and in line 10, after the word "power," to strike out "irrigation;" so as to read:

That the consent of the Government is hereby given to the Capital City Improvement Company, of Helena, Mont., its successors or assigns, to construct across the Missouri River, at some point between the south line of township 12 north, range 2 west, and the north line of township 14 north, range 3 west, Montana meridian, to be determined by them and approved by the Secretary of War, a dam, canal, and appurtenances thereof, for water power and other purposes, and in connection therewith a foot bridge, or bridges, for public use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, after the words "public use," to strike out:

Said dam shall be constructed under the supervision and control of the Secretary of War, and before the same shall be commenced the plans and specifications shall be approved by the Secretary of War. The dam shall be furnished with a suitable boom and log sluice, and the company, or its successors and assigns, shall execute to the United States, with sureties approved by the Secretary of War, a bond in such sum as the Secretary may determine, conditioned to indemnify the United States against all claims for damages for overflow or otherwise caused by the construction of said dam.

And to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the plans for the construction of said dam and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of construction, and when so approved no change shall be made in said plans without the prior approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War: Provided further, That whenever required to do so by the Secretary of War the said company shall construct and maintain in connection with said dam a suitable boom and log sluice; that suitable fishways, to be approved by the United States Fish Commissioner, shall be constructed and maintained in said dam by said corporation, its successors and assigns; and shall obtain and convey to the United States, whenever requested to do so by the Secretary of War, clear title to such land as in his judgment may be required for constructions and approaches to said dam for transferring boats and freight around the same, and shall grant to the United States a free use of water power for operating such construction work; and to insure compliance with these conditions the said company shall execute and deliver to the Secretary of War a proper bond in such amount as may be fixed by him: And provided further, That the said company shall be liable for any damage to private property resulting from the construction and operation of said dam and appurtenant works, either by overflow or otherwise, and proceedings to recover compensation for such damage may be instituted either in the State or Federal courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the United States shall be secured a free right of way for constructions and approaches to said dam for transferring boats and freight around the same, and a free use of water power for operating such construction works.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following as section 2:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the structures herein authorized shall be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 22, after the word "reserved," to strike out: "And the rights and privileges hereby granted to said Capital City Improvement Company shall expire at the end of fifty years from and after the approval of this act;" so as to make the section read:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EVANSTON, WYO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4294) to increase the limit of cost of the post-office and court house at Evanston, Wyo.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office and court-house at Evanston, Wyo., from $179,000 to $181,000, the increase to be employed for the completion of the interior of the building in substituting a marble wainscot for the wainscot now required by the contract for the building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MANUFACTURE OF POWDER.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the publication in the RECORD of an open letter, a copy of which I have in my hand, from Mr. Robert S. Waddell, of Peoria, Ill., addressed to the President and to the committees on appropriations of Congress. It is a remarkably well-written letter. It calls attention to the fact that the manufacture of powder in this country is in the hands of a trust, and to the high price which we are constrained on that account to pay for any powder used in the military or naval service. It is an open secret that the Government is not itself prepared for the manufacture of powder, and if were plunged into war to-morrow there might be great difficulty to command the necessary munitions of war for defense. The letter is well written, and, I think, will tend to excite public attention to a condition which ought to be remedied.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks that the letter of Robert S. Waddell, of Peoria, Ill., be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to its being printed as a document, but I do not think it ought to be printed in the RECORD. I think papers of that kind should not be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to printing the paper in the RECORD.

Mr. DANIEL. I will say, Mr. President, hoping that the Senator may withdraw his objection, it is a matter the public discussion of which can not be avoided. It is idle to suppose that everyone does not know a general condition that has attracted the attention of the press and that has been published in some measure all over the United States. This letter has been sent, I expect, to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but it has also been sent to Senators through the mails, and it is a matter of which some general circulation has already taken place.

I would not ask to have the letter published if I did not think it calls attention to facts which ought to be brought to the minds of the legislators of this country in a way to arouse them to the importance of putting the country in a state of proper defense. That is the only motive which inspires me, seeing to it that the manufacture of the necessaries of life to a country are not wholly controlled by a trust. It is shown in this letter that different powder manufactories have been bought up and are to-day controlled by a trust. The price of powder is four times what it costs, it is asserted in the letter.

Of course, I have no scientific knowledge on this subject. I take things as they come to me, as most of us must, but the questions raised in the letter will be raised publicly upon this floor, and they are bound to be raised publicly. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. It will take less space to publish it in the RECORD than it will to occupy the time of the Senate in making an address to it on this subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. In view of the statement of the Senator I withdraw my objection, although I think it is a bad practice to publish matters of this kind in the RECORD.

Mr. DANIEL. It may be a bad practice in some cases, but I do not think it is a bad practice in this case.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the objection on account of the statement made by the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the letter will be published in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

GREATEST GRAFT OF ALL—AN OPEN LETTER.

To the President and Appropriations Committees of Congress,
Washington, D. C.:

This country, through the wisdom of Congress, has expended hundreds of millions of dollars in building a Navy and constructing fortifications for the defense of the Republic in times of peril. Many more millions have been expended in guns and ordnance for the use of the Navy and Army, for without these our ships and forts would be worthless. You are about to appropriate additional millions of dollars for ships, guns, men, and munitions of war. Without powder to hurl the shot and shells our Navy would be "as idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean."

Yet this great country is wholly dependent in times of peace and war on one gigantic trust that has an absolute and exclusive monopoly for the manufacture of all the powder that the Government requires for offensive and defensive use. When you know beyond a doubt that the Du Pont trust is owned and controlled by men who daily, continually, and openly defy and break the laws of the States and nation, how much faith can be placed in their loyalty and patriotism in times of emergency and national distress?

The Du Pont Powder trust owns and controls the Laflin & Rand, International, and California powder companies. They all bid separately the same price for ordnance smokeless powder, 70 cents per pound, the United States Government to furnish the alcohol, which costs approximately 5 cents per pound. This powder is made by the "powder trust" under inspection of Army and Navy officers stationed at the plants and who know it is composed of cotton saturated in nitric and sulphuric acids, then washed, forming gun cotton that costs from 20 to 22 cents per pound. The gun cotton is then gelatinized, and when completed, with all salaries and expenses added, costs 30 to 35 cents per pound. The Navy and War Departments pay the Du Pont trust 70 cents a pound for all the Government consumes.

For several years the Departments paid the powder pool (Du Pont and Laflin & Rand) 88 and 90 cents per pound. Then the International plant was built, and competition reduced the price to the present basis, when the Du Pont trust obtained control of the International product.

The capacity of the several plants is about as follows: Du Pont, 7,000 pounds daily; 2,100,000 pounds yearly. Laflin & Rand, 7,000 pounds daily; 2,100,000 pounds yearly. International, 6,000 pounds daily; 1,800,000 pounds yearly. California, 4,000 pounds daily; 1,200,000 pounds yearly.

The three eastern seaboard plants are in almost constant operation. Estimating the consumption of the Government at the capacity of the plants, say 7,200,000 pounds per year, the net profits of the Du Pont trust are $2,520,000 a year.

The United States Government can build and equip four better plants than the "trust" owns at a cost not exceeding $250,000 each, pay for these plants out of the profits extorted from the people in a single year, and have more than a million dollars left in the Treasury that would under present conditions be paid to further enrich the "trust." The Navy and Army can detail scores of men, graduates of the academies, who are more competent to direct the making of the powder than those who supply it.

To the query, "If the profits are so large, why do not capitalists invest and compete?"

They know the conditions and methods of the powder trust; that the United States Government is hopelessly at the mercy of this monster, which recently swelled its capital from two millions to fifty millions, on paper. These capitalists know the competition they would offer would prove futile, and in declining assign reasons that are good, but are not complimentary to our Government.

The independent manufacturers of blasting powder and dynamite are defending their right to exist against the unfair, destructive, grafting practices of the Du Pont trust with its rule or ruin policy. These manufacturers, holding charters from many States permitting them to conduct business, and their employees and friends have read the honest and highly commendable public utterances of the President demanding fair dealing for all the people, and they know that the United States Government is furnishing the powder trust the money that is being used to destroy all competitors of the "trust" throughout the country.

These independent manufacturers know that the Du Pont trust is one of the founders and a party to the international agreement between itself and European dynamite manufacturers, fixing prices and dividing the markets of the world. They also understand the influence of this gigantic organization on the construction of the Panama Canal. It discounts Colonel Sellers's eyewater, for there is no lacking ingredient.

The executive and judicial departments are making heroic but vain efforts to enforce the antitrust laws, and the legislative branch is approving such action, or these laws would be repealed. To continue present conditions will stultify the Government.

If required, we will furnish detailed proofs of all these statements and abundant evidence of more than I have mentioned.

Knowing that the Du Pont trust has an absolute, exclusive monopoly of all the resources of national defense and is levying extortions amounting to millions of dollars yearly on the taxpayers of the country, can the representatives of the people in Congress afford to appropriate money to perpetuate these conditions or the President approve such expenditures?

Congress appropriates and the War and Navy Departments expend the funds contributed by the whole people. The Departments are hopelessly in the clutches of the Du Pont trust, and the responsibility for this condition rests on Congress and the President.

I submit that the United States Government should not be particeps criminis in this exclusive monopoly of the "trust;" that the appropriation should be for powder factories that will produce supplies for the Army and Navy wholly independent of unlawful combinations. Any other course would be dangerous and a menace to the public welfare.

Whatever might at one time have been said favorable to support of individual manufacturers, this sentiment vanished with the "passing" of the individual and the advent of the "trust." When any combination of millionaires flagrantly defies the law, creates an exclusive monopoly, corners the market against the United States Government on the one article without the use of which the Army and Navy would be useless, levies an extortionate price in times of peace, who could advocate such a cause? When the call comes to the patriots of the land to offer their lives at $13 per month to defend the flag, who can name the price at which the Du Pont trust will offer its products?

In times of peace this "trust" has prepared for war. It has cornered the market against the Government. With this knowledge will Congress take any chances?

Should appropriations be made for purchase of powder from the "trust" and no provision be made to free the country from its clutches it would be appropriate for the great Atlantic Squadron, the pride of the nation, to assemble off Barnegat and join the forts in a salute across the mud flats of Jersey, half for the honor of the old flag and the other half for the profit of their dictator, the Du Pont trust.

Perhaps it might be well to pull down "Old Glory" and hoist the royal purple standard of the "trust," so long as the country may remain under its absolute dominion. While the heads of the people are bowed in humiliation before this unlawful monopoly, I would suggest another salute across the Atlantic in honor of the modern sentiment, slightly paraphrased: "Millions of dollars for tribute to the Du Pont powder trust, but not a single dollar for defense."

Respectfully,

ROBT. S. WADDELL.

PEORIA, ILL., February 22, 1906.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Thursday next, March 1, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to speak upon House bill 12987, now on the Calendar of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The notice will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I understand there are some Senators who desire to call up bills.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator will permit me to call up a bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a public-building bill on the Calendar which I desire to have passed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will withhold the motion for the present.

MONUMENT AT POINT PLEASANT, W. VA.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 111) to aid in the erection of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the colonial troops and Indians October 10, 1774.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $10,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, to aid in the erection and completion of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the colonial troops and Indians October 10, 1774, but no part of the appropriation shall be expended until the site and plans for the monument or memorial shall be approved by the Secretary of War and the grounds on which the monument or memorial is to be located shall be dedicated to the use of the public and provision be made for opening and maintaining an open highway thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MOSCOW, IDAHO.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 580) to establish a Government building at the town of Moscow, Idaho.

There being no objection; the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Moscow and State of Idaho, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed $75,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisements for the opening of said proposals.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Moscow, in the State of Idaho."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BAKER CITY, OREG.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time the bill (S. 1792) to provide for the erection of a public building at Baker City, in the State of Oregon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on the site now owned by the United States at Baker City, Oreg., a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in Baker City, State of Oregon, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches not to exceed the sum of $75,000, a site having been heretofore selected for such building and ground purchased upon which to erect the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CARTHAGE, MO.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1694) for the erection of a public building at Carthage, Mo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 12, after the word "dollars," to strike out "nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury;" in line 6, page 3, after the word "building," to insert "which does not furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of public business;" and on page 3, line 9, after the word "Treasury," to insert "or;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and for other Government uses, at Carthage, Mo. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000; and no site purchased nor plan of said building which does not furnish sufficient accommodation for the transaction of public business shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury or involving an expenditure exceeding the sum of $100,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PROVO, UTAH.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1878) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Provo, State of Utah.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults and suitable fixtures, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Provo, State of Utah. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

No purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury if the same involve an expenditure exceeding the sum of $60,000 for site and building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GREENVILLE, TEX.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 338) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Greenville, in the State of Texas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty" and insert "seventy;" and on page 2, to strike out all of line 16, down to and including line 12 on page 3, in the following words:

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusions in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and to contract for the erection and completion thereon of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Greenville and State of Texas, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $70,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed site.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALIFORNIA STREET, IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to withhold the motion for a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12614) to change the name of a portion of T street to California street.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that from and after the passage of the act the thoroughfare extending from Columbia road west to Massachusetts avenue extended, formerly named "California avenue," and now designated as "T street," shall be known and designated as "California street."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARNEGIE FOUNDATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF TEACHING.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13538) to incorporate the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair invites the attention of the Senator from Vermont to a notice left with the Secretary by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], announcing his desire to be in the Senate when the bill is under consideration.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Very well; I am perfectly willing to defer its consideration. The Senator from Nevada is in favor of the bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALTON, ILL.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3294) to provide for the erection of a public building at Alton, Ill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other offices of the Government at Alton, Ill., the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed $75,000. The said building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on all sides, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 27, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 26, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast made us immortal souls, and "may we not forget that we are pilgrims and sojourners here, as all our fathers before us were." Help us, we beseech Thee, to set our affections on the things above, so that when the ties of love and affection are broken by death we may not despair, but put our trust in Thee, the living God, who doeth all things well.

The sad tidings of the passing on of one who served faithfully for many years upon the floor of this House, wrought mightily in the committee room, and was at last elevated to the Speakership, where he served for four years with justice and equity to all, touches our hearts profoundly, for many of us knew him intimately and loved him. We thank Thee for his life and for what he did, and may we strive to emulate all that was purest and best in his nature. Be very near, O God, our Father, to the stricken wife and children, and comfort their mourning hearts by the blessed thought that he has only gone before them to some fairer clime to prepare a place for them that they may stay in his presence forever. Hear us in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 2897) granting an increase of pension to Rufus G. Childress.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 32) instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to make examinations into the subject of railroad discriminations and monopolies, and report on the same from time to time.

R. G. CHILDRESS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 344.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House the bill of the House (H. R. 2697) granting an increase of pension to R. G. Childress, said bill having been incorrectly reported and engrossed as H. R. 2897.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE AMERICAN CROSS OF HONOR.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, this being District day, I desire to call up the bill (S. 3945) to incorporate the American Cross of Honor within the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That H. A. George, of Charlottesville, Va.; Richard Stocking, of Trenton, N. J.; John J. Delaney, of New York City, N. Y.; Andrew M. Taylor, of Rondout, N. Y.; Eugene Longstreet, of Brielle, N. J., and Thomas H. Herndon, of Washington, D. C., their associates and successors, are hereby created a body politic and corporate within the District of Columbia, by the name of The American Cross of Honor, for the purpose of bringing into closer relations of fraternal fellowship the said body, and to cause to be perpetuated the memory of the gallant and heroic deeds of those persons upon whom the United States Government has bestowed the life-saving medal of honor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what this is.

Mr. MORRELL. The object of the bill is to incorporate these men upon whom medals of honor have been bestowed by the Government as life savers and allow them to incorporate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe I will object to it.

The SPEAKER. It is not subject to objection. This is District day, and the bill is up for consideration.

Mr. MORRELL. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that this bill has been approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. As I understand it, these are people who have had certain medals conferred upon them?

Mr. MORRELL. That is the object of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And now they want to be incorporated by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why can not they be incorporated under the general laws of the District of Columbia? Why should we stamp this charter as of national importance?

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to the gentleman from Mississippi, I will say that Mr. WILEY, the gentleman who made the report of the bill, is not present in the House. I am simply reading from the report that was made by the gentleman from New Jersey. I have here the letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who approved of this bill. I would like to say also that the House passed this same bill at the last Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what the bill is for, and why they call upon the Federal Government instead of incorporating under the local law?

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to have the bill again read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the bill.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is not entirely competent for these people to incorporate under the general laws of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MORRELL. I think not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why is it necessary for the Congress of the United States to authorize the incorporation of this organization and of every society that comes along that is not of a national character?

Mr. MORRELL. I do not think that this society or organization can be incorporated under the general incorporation laws of the District. I do not think the law is broad enough to cover this.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is a general incorporation law for the District of Columbia that covers every organization, is there not?

Mr. MORRELL. I may be mistaken—I do not like to differ with the gentleman from Minnesota—but my impression is that is the reason why this bill was introduced—that they could not incorporate under the general law of the District of Columbia without having a large number of the incorporators residents of the District. This bill has already passed the Senate, and passed the House last year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and other fraternal organizations are all incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia—the general incorporation act—and I desire to state further that it is hardly fair to the House for the gentleman to come in here and say that it is his impression that such and such things can not be done, and that there is necessity for this or for the doing of this in this manner. The House is entitled to know exactly what the general incorporation law of the District is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call for order. It is impossible to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Now, it may be possible that this question has been asked before. If so, he could not hear it. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania what the reason is that these people do not go down town and incorporate in the District of Columbia under the general incorporation act?

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, in answer, first, to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], I would like to say that the Masonic fraternities are incorporated by special act of Congress, and in answer to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] I would say that the general incorporation act is not broad enough to cover an incorporation of the kind proposed in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, if that is so, what is the reason we do not amend the general incorporation act, instead of bringing these things in here constantly? I have been trying to get rid of the superfluous work of this House, and now we are going to have another superfluous class.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman, I will say that for the present I will withdraw this bill, in view of the prospect of an amendment such as he suggests to the general incorporation act to cover this and similar cases, and I shall be very glad if he will draw such an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the bill.

EASTERN STAR HOME.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13842) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Eastern Star Home for the District of Columbia," approved March 10, 1902, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of incorporation passed by Congress, entitled "An act to incorporate the Eastern Star Home of the District of Columbia," approved March 10, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: After the first word in the name or title, "The," there be added the words "Masonic and," so that the title or name or title will read, "An act to incorporate The Masonic and Eastern Star Home of the District of Columbia," and that the same two words be added in the name or title of said home in the first section of said act.

SEC. 2. That the board of corporators shall add annually to their number three members of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the District of Columbia, whenever they are chosen by that body for that purpose, and also shall add annually any one member from such of the subordinate lodges of said grand lodge as may choose a member for that purpose, and said board when so organized shall have, use, and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges of the board as first constituted, and as may be incident to said corporation.

SEC. 3. That the word "majority" be stricken out and the word "third" inserted in section 4 of said act, so that it will read "A third of the directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield such time as the gentleman may wish to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. SIMS, who made the report on this bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as its reading showed, if anybody either listened or heard, is to amend an existing act of Congress so as to simply add the words "Masonic and," after the word "the" and before the word "Eastern." My understanding is that the Eastern Star Home is a Masonic institution. This bill was presented by the Masons. Unfortunately, I am not a member of that honorable body and I can not explain technically all these things.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. The Eastern Star is under the jurisdiction of the Masonic organization?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is under the jurisdiction of the Masonic order?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the present act incorporating this organization in this city does not admit of the use of the word "Masonic" Star?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. And it is proposed to amend that act so as to admit the organization of the Eastern Star as part of the Masonic order originally provided for in the act of incorporation.

Mr. SIMS. As I understand it, that is correct. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has explained the matter, but I desire to submit a few observations.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, what evidence has the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] that the order of the Eastern Star is a part of the Masonic fraternity? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, there is so much disorder that I can not understand or hear what the gentleman says, but I will read from the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds with his argument, will he not inform us what the bill does?

Mr. SIMS. That is exactly what I am going to do, but I thought the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] had stated that sufficiently.

Mr. MANN. I listened to what the gentleman from Minnesota stated and what the gentleman from Tennessee stated, and the two statements did not seem to jibe.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, the difference is that the Minnesota man is a Mason and the Tennessee man is not.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I read from the bill:

That the act of incorporation passed by Congress, entitled "An act to incorporate The Eastern Star Home of the District of Columbia," approved March 10, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: After the first word in the name or title, "The," there be added the words "Masonic and," so that the title or name or title will read, "An act to incorporate The Masonic and Eastern Star Home of the District of Columbia," and that the same two words be added in the name or title of said home in the first section of said act.

Mr. MANN. Is this a home?

Mr. SIMS. That is what it is called.

Mr. MANN. Incorporated already under a special act of Congress?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was mistaken entirely in his question when he asked if this were not in order to permit the Eastern Star to be incorporated under an act to incorporate Masonic bodies.

Mr. SIMS. I did not so understand the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. That is the question he asked. The Eastern Star is already incorporated, as I understand.

Mr. SIMS. I did not so understand the gentleman from Minnesota. This act is amendatory of existing law.

Mr. MANN. This act adds words to show the Eastern Star is connected in the same way with the Masonic body with which the gentleman from Tennessee and myself are unfortunately not well acquainted.

Mr. SIMS. The report says:

The necessity for the proposed legislation is that the Grand Lodge Free and Accepted Masons of the District of Columbia had not given its consent to the use of the word "Masonic" at the time of the original incorporation, nor had it agreed to take any part in said home. The said grand lodge has since voted unanimously that the word "Masonic" may now be used in connection with the home, and that it will participate with the Eastern Star in its management. It is therefore necessary that the act approved March 10, 1902, be amended as prescribed in the bill herewith reported.

Mr. Speaker, it is noticeable that on each District day some gentleman arises on the floor of this House quaking and trembling for fear some great outrage is going to be perpetrated upon the country by the District Committee. Maybe his fears are well grounded upon his conception and estimate of the District Committee.

Mr. MANN. And experience.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that a gentleman who never served upon this committee has no conception of the arduous duties imposed upon a member of this committee. Remember the government of the District of Columbia is unique. It is not like that of any State; it is not like that of any city in the Union. In many respects it is not like the Federal Government. We have here under the flag a government that is neither republican in form or in fact. We have here a government by commission. Every man in the District of Columbia, whatever may be his wealth or intelligence or other qualifications, is absolutely disfranchised. We have a government here where every citizen is a suppliant and no man a freeman. Congress established this miserable form of government and imposed duties upon the District Committee almost impossible to discharge, growing more arduous all the time, and this bill illustrates the whole method. Congress has to sit down and consider the propriety of adding two words to a local district corporation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIMS. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. Is there not a law for incorporating in the District of Columbia under which this Eastern Star could incorporate under the general law if it chose to do so?

Mr. SIMS. It was incorporated by special act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but is there not a general law under which it can incorporate if it chooses to do so?

Mr. SIMS. I understand not.

Mr. MANN. If that be the case, if there be no general law under which incorporations can be obtained by charitable enterprises in the District of Columbia, I think the District Committee is subject to severe criticism.

Mr. SIMS. No doubt the gentleman thinks so, as he often participates in that kind of performance, and no doubt patriotically from his standpoint. That is one reason why I am making the remarks I am. Here we have a unique government, more monarchical and despotic in form than any city in Europe.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit an interruption?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, in order that this may be clearly understood, this order was incorporated and at that time the Masonic order had not given its consent to the use of the word "Masonic," and since then it has rescinded that action and has passed a resolution authorizing the use of that name, and it is proposed to amend the act in conformity with the consent of the order thus given.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask that I go on with the trend of my remarks before so many interruptions are made. I want to say that it is impossible, almost, for the District Committee to do the duty it should do to the District government of Washington and do any other duty. Now, think of how Members come here as the Representatives of their Congressional districts, interested, first, in great national policies about which parties express themselves in national platforms; interested next in such legislation as applies locally to their districts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to interrupt the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], but will he explain to me and to the House just why and in how far the purposes sought to be accomplished by this incorporation could not be accomplished under the general law of the District? He said a moment ago that he understood that they could not get the charter to accomplish this purpose. Now, if I understand it, there is a very broad general law here for the incorporation of charitable associations and benevolent associations, and all that. In how far does it fall short of what these people wish to accomplish?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi I wish to say this, that this bill was brought to our committee and its passage asked by the parties interested; and it was stated to me by a former Member of this Congress, the Hon. James D. Richardson, that this was their only opportunity, and I took his word for it as being worth more than mine, and without investigating or looking into it any further. As the Eastern Star was incorporated by special act of Congress, its charter could not be amended under the provisions of the general law, or so it was represented to me.

But I want to get back to the point I was discussing. I desire to say that this city is growing, is increasing in importance all the time, and it is absolutely necessary in a commission-run city, where there is not an officer in it from the highest to the lowest who is elected or responsible to anybody but the appointing power, that the people come continually and ask Congress to do for them what they ought to do for themselves.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman says this is an unrepublican form of government here, because the people have no right to vote; that the people are mere petitioners. Has the committee considered a bill, and, if they have, why do they not report a bill, to remove that trouble, and give these people a right to vote?

Mr. SIMS. I was going to discuss that matter, but I want to try to take it up in some order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did we not give the people here the right to vote once, and did they not come and ask Congress to take that privilege away from them? I am told that is a fact.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to proceed in order. I want to say first to this House that the present form of government is neither republican in fact nor form. I have just stated that Members are elected here first upon national policies, and, second, interests by which their districts are affected. Take a gentleman of this House and put him on the District Committee—one who has never been brought in contact with this city or its government—and he is up against what he knows nothing at all about. And in order to make a good member of that committee—and when I say good I mean in the sense of being useful—he has got to abandon everything else and give it his entire time and attention, and possibly after the second or third term that he has served on that committee, when he becomes sufficiently familiar with the duties to be worth something, he is retired from Congress and a new man is put into his place. Now, this city will no doubt be some day a city of some 500,000 inhabitants or more, and under our present form of government they must come to Congress for every little thing—and this bill is an illustration of it. Everybody is disfranchised. The model city of America, which should be a model of its institutions as well as merely physical appearances, is governed more despotically and with less of self-government than the smallest town in any of the States.

This kind of thing is going to get worse. Year in and year out the business of the District is going to increase until it will be physically and mentally impossible for any committee to transact all the business necessary. On account of the uniqueness of the government, on account of being similar to no other, Members of the House who do not study it and know but little about it are continually asking questions upon the floor of the House on account of their lack of knowledge which implies a criticism of members of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has spoken of the amount of business pending before that committee. Can he state upon what theory the committee devoted its time to the consideration and report of the bill incorporating the American Institute for Drug Proving, if under the District laws it can be incorporated?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I decline to answer that question simply for the reason I want to talk upon the line I have mapped out and I do not propose to be diverted to a proposition that is not before the House. The bill may shortly come before the House, and then the gentleman can properly ask his question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has been speaking about the troubles of this committee and their inability to do anything except to attend to matters of the District government, yet they prepared and reported a bill, somewhat elaborate, to incorporate the American Institute for Drug Proving. Now, if that is a proper thing to be done anywhere, why do not the gentlemen say that it should be done under the general incorporation law of the District?

Mr. SIMS. I acknowledge my gratitude again to my esteemed friend and party associate, who has again given us another lecture, which, no doubt, he thinks we deserve.

Mr. ADAMSON. As I understand the gentleman from Tennessee, the practical result aimed at in this bill is to correct the incorporation act of the Eastern Star.

Mr. SIMS. To amend the act.

Mr. ADAMSON. To amend it; that is the result of it. I may not have understood your answers to other gentlemen. Can not that be accomplished in the District of Columbia with the provisions already made by act of Congress for the chartering of that institution?

Mr. SIMS. Those interested in the bill say that it can not be. I do not state it of my own knowledge.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk along the line that I have indicated. If any gentleman wants to ask me a question pertinent to the discussion, I will be glad to answer if I can.

We have here a Board of Commissioners—three mayors—one of them an Army officer. I want to say that I have no criticism to make of these three Commissioners. If they were not in office and I knew them as I do, and I should be asked who I would recommend for appointment, I would state these three gentlemen. But the difficulty inheres in the system of government. Under the Constitution, of course, Congress has jurisdiction of this District; but that is no reason why there should be no form of self-government. Appoint a commissioner or a governor, or whatever you want to call him, by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, but in so far as local municipal matters are concerned why not leave it to a council elected by the votes of the people in this District who are interested in all these matters? The District debt, as I am informed, is about $12,000,000 or more, which has been largely created through street-extension improvements. Remember there is not a dollar of indebtedness in this city that has been made by the votes of the people who live here. The taxpayers have absolutely no representation. But in 1878 Congress undertook to pay one-half of all the expenses of this District, even of the principal and interest of this indebtedness.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question on that point?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has the gentleman taken any pains to inform himself with respect to the sentiment of the people of the District on the subject of self-government?

Mr. SIMS. I have to some extent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I quite agree with the criticism the gentleman makes with respect to the lack of self-government here. It seems to me that the people of the District of Columbia ought to be as able to take care of their own municipal affairs as the people of any city in the country would be, particularly when they have before them constantly the exalted example of statesmanship of the House and Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. I assure the gentleman that in my intercourse with the people here I have not heard a single citizen of the District of Columbia express himself who does not feel that the present form of government is a denial of liberty. Here is a debt piled up on these people that they did not make. Taxes are levied without their consent; but I want to say that I think they are the lowest-taxed people of any city that I know of, and I propose at some time in the near future to dwell on that more at length. But Congress, on account of this city being the seat of government of the United States, the capital city, has undertaken out of a spirit of generosity, because it occupied large spaces with its parks and public buildings, to pay one-half of the expenses of the District government. It might have been wise at one time, and it might be wise now, provided this city never expands; but I ask you as practical men, how does it conduce to the interest of the Government of the United States to pay taxes to build up Anacostia, Bennings race track, Chevy Chase, or Tennallytown?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the Government should reduce the percentage which it pays of the municipal exepenses it would probably promote a stronger sentiment in the District in favor of local self-government, would it not?

Mr. SIMS. No doubt of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the gentleman believe that we pay, perhaps, a little more than our pro rata equitable share of the expenses of the District government?

Mr. SIMS. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And is not that a reason why there is no stronger sentiment or demand for local self-government?

Mr. SIMS. I have no doubt of that, especially among the wealthy classes of the District, and, as I stated, perhaps it was wise at the time the arrangement was entered into for the United States Government to pay one-half, but I am now showing to you that the city is growing and building up very much. And, as I have said, what interest has the United States Government as a capital; how does it assist you in performing your duties here; how does it assist the President and his Cabinet officers and the Supreme Court for this Government to pay out money for the improvement of Anacostia, Bennings, Chevy Chase, and Tennallytown, and I do not know how many more just such places? But yet we are doing it.

But this payment by the Government of the United States must keep increasing as the city increases and as expenses increase. The bonded debt of the city is only about $12,000,000, yet the current expenses of the District government are ten or twelve million dollars, and the Government of the United States pays one-half of that. It will no doubt reach a point some time when the expenses of the District of Columbia will be $20,000,000 a year, and the Government will be paying one-half of that. Can it possibly, directly or indirectly, be of any benefit to this Government's Capitol to have a great city surrounding it? Why not have every city where there is a State capitol receive the same assistance? Why not have the State pay one-half the municipal expenses of the city in which the State capitol is located? Why not have the counties pay one-half the expenses of the town in which the county court-house and government is located? Yet that is what we are doing here.

Well, I know there is one bugaboo that has been held up in the past, that if we give the franchise to the citizens of the District of Columbia a large vote will be admitted that is unprepared by education and intelligence to vote properly on the questions as to what a great capital wants and needs. It is unnecessary for me to refer to that. It is a tender subject, but we have to stand it in our cities down South as best we can. Why not let the capital of the nation wrestle with that problem? Why not have local self-government here and let Congress provide entirely for the expense of maintaining the public buildings and the public parks, like the Mall, within the city limits? But why should your constituents be taxed to build a great avenue like Sixteenth street out 6 miles to the boundary? Why do we here, in the face of all the world, proclaim ourselves to be the model Government of the earth, a republican Government, where every man is a free man and no man is governed against his will, maintain in this city a form of despotism than which there is no worse anywhere that I know anything about in any enlightened country? Whether it has worked well or worked badly, it is not American, it is not republican, it is not democratic. I am talking in rather a random way, but I am studying this subject with a view to bringing to this House a proposition to establish local self-government in this District. It is not inconsistent with the jurisdiction of the United States Government to retain the powers necessary to be exercised due to the fact that this is the national capital.

In order to do this, I for one am perfectly willing that the United States Government should assume and pay the present District bonded indebtedness. There are ten or twelve million dollars bonds, but it will not be long until this Government, year in and year out, will appropriate a sum as its share of the expense of running the government of the District of Columbia equal to the entire funded or bonded indebtedness. When they want a little street opened, let them go to their own local government, let them elect their own council, let them have full charge of all municipal matters and feel its responsibilities, and pay the taxes. Then you will have free men exercising the duties and functions of free men; and if it is not in all respects as imperial and grandiloquent and beautiful as it is now, under its present autocratic control, we will have a model for all the world of a republican city in the capital of the great Republic of the nation. Our institutions will be benefited and beautified, whether our boulevards here look as grand as they now do or not. Why, no time will elapse hardly before you will be called upon to make an appropriation for a street out west to a great educational institution that the United States Government does not need and never can, and yet you are talking all the time about making this a model city, and one of the effects of the model is that we have a government here that did not tax personal property at all until recently, but was the resort of tax dodging millionaires that had grown wealthy in the States in which they lived by reason of the privileges they had in their own States and then moved to Washington and brought their stocks and bonds, and thus escaping the burden of government, the duties of citizenship at home, and we impose practically nothing upon them here.

Parties have actually come before the committee openly advocating that there should be no tax on personal property; that it might be an attraction to the millionaires whose property consisted of bonds and mortgages to come here and build magnificent homes, and who would rush around in the sight of we Democrats and Republicans in all the glory that any lord of Europe possibly could. And yet, gentlemen, you sit here year in and year out and permit these things to continue, and criticise the District Committee. I tell you, gentlemen, the District Committee has almost an impossible task before it. I am bringing these thoughts to your mind that you may think about it and that we may adopt some other form of government that will be more republican and more democratic; that will represent the free institutions and the free spirit of our people, and that will relieve Congress of duties that it ought never to have been called upon to perform; that in the end will relieve the taxpayers of the United States of the burden they ought not to bear, and which will not increase the burden of the people of this city beyond that of other cities, so far as taxation goes. I have studied this matter, and I call upon the Members of this House to do likewise. I would not have gone into this subject in this general way had it not been for the criticisms on the bill—all of which may be just. We can not stop to investigate and get to the bottom of every proposition to see whether the supreme court of the District of Columbia or the court of appeals have decided this way or that way; as to whether a charter might be granted under local laws or not. We took the words of those who ought to know. It furnishes you with an example of what we are called upon to do, and without any change in our city government, what you will be called upon to do forever in an increasing ratio.

As far as this bill is concerned, I see no harm in it. The organization already exists. The charter is granted, and it is simply to amend and give it the additional name of Masonic with that of Eastern Star.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman has given a fine diagnosis of the very sick condition of the District of Columbia. Has the gentleman got a bill, or is the committee going to report a bill, prescribing any cure for the disease? Why doesn't the committee bring in some sort of a cure for it? The gentleman is a good lawyer and he is a member of the committee. About six years ago I was talking with one of the leading bankers of this city, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] introduced a bill proposing to give the people of the District the right to vote. This banker jumped on me and said, "For God's sake, don't give us the right to vote; the niggers ran away with us when he had it, and we had to come to you and ask you to take it away from us." [Laughter.] I will give the gentleman the name of the banker if he wants it.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I don't want it. I am surprised that my colleague from the Hermitage should ever be turned away from a Democratic thought by the reply of a banker. [Laughter.] Why does not my friend from Tennessee, my colleague, go into the study of this thing, as I have?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will draw a bill I will vote for it.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know that I could draw a satisfactory bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will help you make one.

Mr. SIMS. All right. Now I feel safe. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If Members would consult me a little oftener than they do, they would all be more safe. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. No, Mr. Speaker, there is no bill before the House. I confess in my modesty, which you all know is proverbial, that I hesitate to put in form such a bill, but, of course, with the aid of my colleague, I might be able to do it. I am going to introduce a resolution into this House to ask the Speaker to appoint a special committee to consider this question and report a bill that will bring about local self-government in which the people have a right to vote upon all matters affecting their local interests.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no necessity for the proposed legislation, for the reason that incorporation can be had under the law as it is now written. And if he will allow me to inject into the midst of his remarks a little parenthesis, I would say that his complaint that we are called on here to consider the matters in detail, which ought to be left to the general law, is the fault of our own committee and not the fault of Congress. Everybody who wants a little more glory than the rest of the people, who is not content to get a charter from a State, who is not content to get a charter from the District of Columbia under the general law, comes here asking some special privilege in the way of a special charter, so that they may outshine other corporations of the country. You have had the same thing in the Educational Committee, and the same thing in several other committees. I would like now to read a provision of the District Code, and I will ask the gentleman to pay attention to this law as I read it as it now stands:

Any three or more persons of full age, citizens of the United States, a majority of whom shall be citizens of the District, who desire to associate themselves for benevolent, charitable, educational, literary, musical, scientific, religious, or missionary purposes, including societies formed for mutual improvement or for the promotion of the arts, may make, sign, and acknowledge, before any officer authorized to take acknowledgment of deeds in the District, and file in the office of the recorder of deeds, to be recorded by him, a certificate in writing, in which shall be stated—

First. The name or title by which such society shall be known in law.

Second. The term for which it is organized, which may be perpetual.

Third. The particular business and objects of the society.

Fourth. The number of its trustees, directors, or managers for the first year of its existence.

Upon filing their certificates the persons who shall have signed and acknowledged the same, and their associates and successors, shall be a body politic and corporate, by the name stated in such certificate; and by that name they and their successors may have and use a common seal, and may alter and change the same at pleasure, and may make by-laws and elect officers and agents, and take, receive, hold, and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the society as stated in their certificate, and other real and personal property the clear annual income from which shall not exceed in value $25,000: Provided, however, That this section shall not be construed to exempt any property from taxation in addition to that now specifically exempted by law.

Now, I would like the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] to point out in what particular this law is deficient, so that that organization may not be incorporated under the general law of the District of Columbia as it is now written. Mr. Speaker, it can be, it ought to be, all of these incorporations ought to be according to the general law, and these special privileges in the way of special charters we ought to set our faces against now and forever, one and all.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to answer the question that was asked with all due respect, and to say that this incorporation was by special act of Congress, and therefore we do not think that they can be incorporated under the general law. This only amends the special act. It is not an original charter. If the organization had been incorporated under the general law, perhaps what the gentleman said would be applicable. As suggested to me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I would state that you can not amend an act of Congress by a certificate in the way that is required under the general law.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SOCIETY SONS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15332) to incorporate the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Francis Henry Appleton, of Massachusetts; Lucius P. Deming, of Connecticut; William Seward Webb, of Vermont; Horace Porter, of New York; Joseph C. Breckenridge, of Washington, D. C.; Franklin Murphy, of New Jersey; Walter S. Logan, of New York; Edwin Warfield, of Maryland; Edwin S. Greeley, of Connecticut; James D. Hancock, of Pennsylvania; Morris B. Beardsley, of Connecticut; John C. Lewis, of Kentucky; Henry Stockbridge, of Maryland; Nelson A. McClary, of Illinois; A. Howard Clark, of Washington, D. C.; Isaac W. Birdseye, of Connecticut; William K. Wickes, of New York; J. W. Atwood, of Ohio; J. W. Whiting, of Alabama; Ricardo E. Miner, of Arizona; Joseph M. Hill, of Arkansas; Alexander G. Eells, of California; Clarkson N. Guyer, of Colorado; Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut; Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware; William H. Bayly, of Washington, D. C.; William S. Keyser, of Florida; Charles M. Cook, of Hawaii; Inman H. Fowler, of Indiana; Eugene Secor, of Iowa; John M. Meade, of Kansas; Peter F. Pescud, of Louisiana; Waldo Pettengill, of Maine; James D. Iglehart, of Maryland; Moses G. Parker, of Massachusetts; Rufus W. Clark, of Michigan; James C. Haynes, of Minnesota; Ashley Cabell, of Missouri; Ogden A. Southmayd, of Montana; Amos Field, of Nebraska; Daniel C. Roberts, of New Hampshire; J. Franklin Fort, of New Jersey; William A. Marble, of New York; Isaac F. Mack, of Ohio; Henry H. Edwards, of Oklahoma; Thomas M. Anderson, of Oregon; William L. Jones, of Pennsylvania; John E. Studley, of Rhode Island; Theodore G. Carter, of South Dakota; J. A. Cartwright, of Tennessee; I. M. Standifer, of Texas; Fred A. Hale, of Utah; Henry D. Holton, of Vermont; Lunsford L. Lewis, of Virginia; Cornelius H. Hanford, of Washington; J. Franklin Pierce, of Wisconsin; Truman G. Avery, of New York; William W. J. Warren, of New York; Henry V. A. Joslin, of Rhode Island; John Paul Earnest, of Washington, D. C., and all such other persons as may from time to time be associated with them, and their successors, are hereby constituted a body corporate and politic, to be located in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, by the name of The National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

SEC. 2. That the purposes and objects of said corporation are declared to be patriotic, historical, and educational, and shall include those intended or designed to perpetuate the memory of the men who, by their services or sacrifices during the war of the American Revolution, achieved the independence of the American people; to unite and promote fellowship among their descendants; to inspire them and the community at large with a more profound reverence for the principles of the Government founded by our forefathers; to encourage historical research in relation to the American Revolution; to acquire and preserve the records of the individual services of the patriots of the war, as well as documents, relics, and landmarks; to mark the scenes of the Revolution by appropriate memorials; to celebrate the anniversaries of the prominent events of the war and of the Revolutionary period; to foster true patriotism; to maintain and extend the institutions of American freedom, and to carry out the purposes expressed in the preamble to the Constitution of our country and the injunctions of Washington in his farewell address to the American people.

SEC. 3. That said corporation shall have power to receive, purchase, hold, sell, and convey real and personal estate, so far only as may be necessary or convenient for its lawful purposes, to an amount not exceeding at any one time in the aggregate $500,000; to sue and be sued, complain and defend in any court; to adopt a common seal, and to alter the same at pleasure; to make and adopt a constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations for admission, government, suspension, and expulsion of its members, and from time to alter and repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations, and to adopt others in their places; to provide for the election of its officers and to define their duties; to provide for State societies or chapters with rules for their conduct, and to regulate and provide for the management, safe-keeping, and protection of its property and funds: Provided always, That such constitution, by-laws, rules, and regulations be not inconsistent with the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof.

SEC. 4. That the property and affairs of said corporation shall be managed by not more than sixty nor less than forty trustees, who shall be elected annually at such time as shall be fixed in the by-laws, and at least one trustee shall be elected annually from a list of nominees to be made by each of the State societies and submitted to this society at least thirty days before the annual meeting, in accordance with general provisions regulating such nominations as may be adopted by this society.

SEC. 5. That the first meeting of this corporation shall be held on a call issued by any fifteen of the above-named incorporators by a written notice signed by them, stating the time and place of meeting, addressed to each of the corporators personally named herein and deposited in the post office at least five days before the day of meeting.

SEC. 6. That this charter shall take effect upon its being accepted by a majority vote of the corporators named herein who shall be present at said meeting, or at any other meeting specially called for that purpose; and notice of such acceptance shall be given by said corporation by causing a certificate to that effect signed by its president and secretary to be filed in the office of the Secretary of State.

SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, on that bill I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri raises the question of consideration upon the bill, and the question is, Will the House consider the bill?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The question is, Will the House consider the bill?

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. MORRELL, there were—ayes 85, noes 36.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands tellers. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-six gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the House determined to consider the bill.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, Mr. OLCOTT, who made the report upon the bill.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the incorporation of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. The reason why it is necessary to get a special charter from Congress is because the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia require one-half of the members of the board to be residents of the District. In view of the fact that societies of kindred nature and similar name exist in nearly all of the States of the Union, it is advisable to have a sufficiently large board of directors and a sufficiently general representation so that the society will be in fact what this bill makes it in name—a national society.

The bill has the entire approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and I ask for its passage. I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, here we are asked to give a national charter without any consideration scarcely of this House to a proposed corporation. As I have just shown, it may be incorporated under the general law prevailing in this District now, provided three of them are residents of the District. That same company may be incorporated under the State laws of any of the States of this Union, and there is no necessity why it should have a national charter. If such incorporation were asked for under the laws of my State, the judge of the circuit court would appoint some person to investigate it, to see whether it complied with the law, and see whether its purposes were such as they claimed to be, to report back to the court before it could get its charter; but here, in the twinkling of an eye, you are passing these incorporations, one after another, as they seek to have it done, without any consideration, without any knowledge as to whether they are properly limited as they should be. And for what purpose? Will the gentleman tell me why this particular corporation should have more dignity than another? Why should this corporation come to Congress for its charter when it can go to any of the States of this Union?

Mr. OLCOTT. I will answer briefly; because they can not get a charter from any one of the States sufficiently broad to make the society national in its character, and because it is desired to have directors who are residents of the several States of the Union. It is impossible to do that in the District of Columbia on account of the provisions of the incorporation laws. This difficulty is also found in the laws of most of the States.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes, Mr. Speaker; it is the beginning of a flood of bills which are to come in here asking incorporation of companies that will make them bigger than all of the States. It is the thin edge of a wedge that is to be driven into our corporation laws of the country. There is in the land a disposition to have incorporations that shall not be subject to State control, a system of corporations that shall not be subject to State taxation, a system of corporations that shall be above and beyond the sovereignty of the States of this Union. There is no evil, perhaps, in this particular corporation, but here everybody is citing something as a precedent, and when any corporation comes and asks for a charter this will be cited as a precedent why the other should be granted. One other proposition. The corporation laws should be uniform. Corporation charters ought to be uniform. Here we come in and incorporate companies not according to a general standard established by the wisdom of this House, but according to the predilection of the people who come and ask for the charter. They are not uniform in their provisions. They are not uniform in their scope. As I said a moment ago, they are above and beyond the power of the State, beyond the powers and control of the State, beyond the power of the State to tax them, and while this one is possibly one that ought not to be taxed perhaps the very next corporation might represent something that ought to be taxed and we put them beyond the control of those who ought to control them. I am opposed tooth and nail to going into the incorporation business by individual acts of Congress, and I believe we ought to require these corporations, like all others, to go to some existing law and take out this incorporation according to some general standard that prevails in this country.

Mr. OLCOTT. Allow me to say one thing in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, and that is that a sister society, the Daughters of the American Revolution, has already been incorporated and was incorporated here, and mainly for the reason this one is sought to be incorporated—that it would make it more national in character.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not the gentleman think that is the very foundation of the argument I made a while ago, because if you admit one you say you must admit the other, and when these two are incorporated, why, you can cite that as a reason why the next twenty ought to be incorporated, and when they are incorporated that will be cited as to why the next ten million ought to be incorporated? And the States would be ignored, and the general laws of this District will be ignored.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KAHN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. KAHN. A parliamentary inquiry. When will it be in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Now.

Mr. KAHN. I then offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 24, after the word "Columbia," insert the following: "A. S. Hubbard, of California."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendment.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seem to have it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 14813.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the provision of the act approved March 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," for the relief, during widowhood, of dependent mothers of unmarried deceased members of said Metropolitan police force and of unmarried deceased members of the fire department of said District, shall include such mothers of any such deceased members of said police force and of said fire department who have died from injury or disease prior to March 1, 1905.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before this is done so rapidly, let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he would mind having the report read?

Mr. MORRELL. No.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BABCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14813) to amend an act approved March 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

By the provisions of the act approved March 1, 1905 (Public, No. 120), the Commissioners were authorized to grant pensions to dependent mothers of unmarried members of the Metropolitan police or of the fire department whose deaths resulted from injury or disease, such pension to be paid only during widowhood of the dependent mothers. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to provide pensions for dependent mothers of firemen whose deaths occurred before the passage of the act of March 1, 1905, and to make the payment of the pensions begin from the date of the enactment of the bill, so that the relief will not be retroactive.

Your committee is informed that there are four cases to which provisions of this proposed legislation will apply, all being mothers of deceased firemen and in necessitous circumstances. Inasmuch as the fund out of which these pensions is paid is made up almost entirely from payments made monthly by each member of these two organizations (the deficit, if any, being derived from receipts from fines in the police court and from revenues from dog licenses), the United States Government therefore bears no proportion of the money so expended. Your committee believes that the proposed legislation is just, as it simply places four dependent mothers whose sons died prior to March 1, 1905, on the same basis as dependent mothers who have lost their sons since that date and who are now receiving a pension under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1905.

This measure was prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who urge its enactment into law, as will be seen by the following communication:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 12, 1906.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill to amend an act approved March 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901," and to recommend its early enactment.

The object of this bill is to provide for dependent mothers of firemen whose deaths occurred before the passage of the act of March 1, 1905, therein mentioned, and to make the payment of the pensions begin from the date of the enactment of the bill, so that the relief will not be retroactive.

Very respectfully, HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND.
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANACOSTIA FLATS.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House concurrent resolution No. 21.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to submit to Congress a report upon the improvement of the so-called "flats of the Anacostia River" from its mouth to the District line, with recommendations and estimates of cost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the District business [Mr. MORRELL] if this takes the place of the Senate bill which was recently before the House?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have withdrawn the bill S. No. 71 on the same subject that is now on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What disposition does the gentleman desire to be made of it?

Mr. MORRELL. That it be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] asks unanimous consent to lay Senate bill No. 71 on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ABANDONMENT AND NEGLECT OF WIFE AND CHILDREN.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 14545.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person in the District of Columbia who shall, without just cause, desert or willfully neglect or refuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his wife in destitute or necessitous circumstances, or any person who shall, without lawful excuse, desert or willfully neglect or refuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her minor children under the age of 16 years in destitute or necessitous circumstances, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia at hard labor for not more than twelve months, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and should a fine be imposed it may be directed by the court to be paid in whole or in part to the wife or to the guardian or custodian of the minor child or children: Provided, That before the trial, with the consent of the defendant, or after conviction, instead of imposing the punishment hereinbefore provided, or in addition thereto, the court, in its discretion, having regard to the circumstances and to the financial ability or earning capacity of the defendant, shall have the power to make an order, which shall be subject to change by it from time to time as circumstances may require, directing the defendant to pay a certain sum weekly for the space of one year to the wife, or to the guardian or custodian of the minor child or children, or to an organization or individual approved by the court as trustee, and to release the defendant from custody on probation for the space of one year upon his or her entering into a recognizance, with or without sureties, in such sum as the court may direct. The condition of the recognizance shall be such that if the defendant shall make his or her personal appearance in court whenever ordered to do so within the year, and shall further comply with the terms of the order and of any subsequent modification thereof, then the recognizance shall be void, otherwise of full force and effect.

If the court be satisfied by information and due proof, under oath, that at any time during the year the defendant has violated the terms of such order, it may forthwith proceed with the trial of the defendant under the original charge, or sentence him under the original conviction, or enforce the original sentence, as the case may be. In case of forfeiture of a recognizance and enforcement thereof by execution, the sum recovered may, in the discretion of the court, be paid in whole or in part to the wife, or to the guardian or custodian of the minor child or children.

SEC. 2. That no other evidence shall be required to prove marriage of such husband and wife, or that such person is the lawful father or mother of such child or children, than is or shall be required to prove such facts in a civil action. In all prosecutions under this act any existing provisions of law prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife shall not apply, and both husband and wife shall be competent and compellable witnesses to testify to any and all relevant matters, including the fact of such marriage and the parentage of such child or children. Proof of the desertion of such wife, child, or children in destitute or necessitous circumstances, or of neglect to furnish such wife, child, or children necessary and proper food, clothing, or shelter is prima facie evidence that such desertion or neglect is willful.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the superintendent in charge of the workhouse of the District of Columbia in which any person is confined on account of a sentence under this law to pay over to the wife, or to the guardian or custodian of his or her minor child or children, or to an organization or individual approved by the court as trustee, at the end of each week, for the support of such wife, child, or children, a sum equal to 50 cents for each day's hard labor performed by said person so confined.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "just" and insert the word "reasonable."

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "lawful" and insert the word "reasonable."

Page 4, line 2, insert a comma after the word "pay" and also insert the words "out of any funds available."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], who made the report on this bill, to withdraw certain amendments that were made with the consent of the committee.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, in line 4, on page 1, withdraw the amendment and substitute "reasonable" for the word "just." There will be no amendment in that line then.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "just" and insert "reasonable."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Also, in line 7 there is an amendment, to insert "reasonable" for the word "lawful." I move to amend the amendment by substituting the word "just" for the word "reasonable."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 amend the amendment by striking out "reasonable" and inserting "just."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask the gentleman what he is trying to do now?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I am trying to substitute the word "just" in place of the word "reasonable."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman does not think the word "just," or "just excuse," should be eliminated entirely?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What excuse will any man give for deserting or willfully neglecting and refusing to provide for the support and maintenance of his minor children under the age of 16 years in destitute circumstances that would be just? What would be a just excuse?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Suppose there should be circumstances where he had not the custody of the children, and there was a judgment awarded against him for the support of the children. Suppose the wife should not use the money for that purpose? Having been required to provide for them by a judgment of the court, would not that be a reasonable excuse?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They provide in the judgment of the court to pay the money to some other person.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That would be a just excuse nevertheless.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be any excuse for neglecting to provide for the minor children in destitute circumstances. I will ask the gentleman to yield to me a moment to move an amendment to strike out all of this qualifying language, so that the bill shall read:

Or any person who shall desert or willfully neglect or refuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her minor children under the age of 16 years in destitute or necessitous circumstances.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will say to the gentleman that it was that way upon the bill as it was first written.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As the bill was first written it read, "Without lawful excuse." As the committee reports it it reads, "Without reasonable excuse." And now the committee amend it by making it "just excuse."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. That is right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And in this very peculiar condition of mind the committee is getting into I would like to eliminate all excuse.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman would like to eliminate the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might be advisable in this condition.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I quite understand from the gentleman's standpoint it might be. But it seems to me that the word "just" ought to be acceptable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to ask the gentleman to state what would be a just excuse for a man to willfully neglect to provide for his minor children under 16 years of age in destitute circumstances?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I have stated one before, and I do not care to argue the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You have already modified the provision.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Let it go that way. Suppose a man were confined in the hospital himself sick, and had no money?

Mr. MORRELL. I call for a vote on the amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRELL. I will for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In line 7 I move to strike out the words "just excuse." I wish the gentleman would give me two minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "just excuse."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield to me two minutes?

Mr. MORRELL. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two minutes is all I asked.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides, as it has been amended by the committee, "that any person who shall without just excuse desert and willfully neglect or refuse to provide for the support and maintenance of his or her minor children under the age of 16 years in destitute or necessitous circumstances, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." If the amendment that has just been offered be adopted, it will make the penalty attach to any person who deserts or who willfully neglects to provide for these infant children. It seems to me that when provision is made under the words "willfully refuse to provide for children under these circumstances," it is very unwise to make any qualification as to the act. Anybody who willfully refuses to provide for his children under these circumstances, in my opinion, should not be permitted to attempt to persuade anybody that there was a just excuse. Now, the gentleman has said that it would not be willful because the man was sick. The term "willful" is recognized and has a well-defined meaning in law, and there is no necessity for offering any qualification of that term.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken on the committee amendment as amended, and then afterwards on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "without just excuse."

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the other amendments of the committee will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MORRELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of taxation in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRELL. There are no other bills that the District Committee desires to call up for consideration at this time.

LAKE ERIE AND OHIO RIVER SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees, and the pending question is the vote on the question of consideration of the bill H. R. 14396, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14396) to incorporate the Lake Erie and Ohio River Ship Canal Company, to define the powers thereof, and to facilitate interstate commerce.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are ordered upon the bill. As many as are in favor of considering the bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed "nay." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 67, answered "present" 12, not voting 117, as follows:

Mr. TOWNSEND with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. VAN WINKLE with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. REYNOLDS with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. WHARTON with Mr. SMALL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill were read to the House a few days ago. Before discussing the sections, permit me to direct attention for a moment to the location where it is proposed to construct the canal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, can not we make some arrangement about the division of time for debate?

Mr. DAVIDSON. How much time does the gentleman want on that side?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think an hour on each side would be about right.

Mr. DAVIDSON. That would be agreeable to us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will submit that the gentleman ask unanimous consent for two hours' debate, one hour in favor of the bill, to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and one half to be controlled by me in opposition to it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent that the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi be agreed to—that debate be limited to two hours, one hour on each side, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the other hour by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill were read to the House a few days ago. Before discussing those provisions permit me to direct attention to the purpose of this measure and what will be accomplished if the project is carried through. Separating the Great Lakes and the Ohio River is a portage of about 100 miles width. The Great Lakes system, with its connecting waterways—the St. Lawrence and Erie Canal—to the Atlantic, offers facilities to the commerce of all the northern tier of States. The Ohio and Mississippi River system, with their tributaries, offer the same advantages to the great central and southern sections of our country. If these two great waterway systems can be brought together, it will form one system of over 15,000 miles of navigable waterway and make possible the interchange of commerce produced by twenty-four States of the Union, at a cost for transportation of less than one-sixth of what it now costs to move the same products by rail.

Across this portage ten lines of railroad now annually carry a commerce of 50,000,000 tons. The great bulk of that commerce consists of iron ore, coke, and coal. The iron ore comes from the mines of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan by water to Lake Erie ports, and there transferred to the rail and brought thence to the furnaces of that great manufacturing district of which Pittsburg is the center.

The ore is there converted into the various merchantable products of iron, and these are again sent out through all sections of the country wherever iron is used in the construction of buildings, bridges, or any other industry into which iron enters, as well as the finished product of the thousand and one articles used on the farms and in the homes of our country.

Every saving made, therefore, on the cost of transporting the ore or the finished product is a benefit to the people.

The great bulk of the coal and coke produced in that great manufacturing district of Pittsburg crosses this portage and goes to the Northwest. All the various industries using either of these articles receive their supply from this section, and any movement by which the cost of transporting coal and coke is cheapened benefits the consumers of that article. The consumers are not those alone who live at the ports on the Great Lakes, but include those living far in the interior—Minnesota, the Dakotas, Nebraska, and Kansas.

This 50,000,000 tons of commerce is now carried by the railroads at an average cost of 7½ mills per ton per mile. The ten roads now operating across this portage are not sufficient to handle this traffic at all seasons of the year. For months at a time there is a congestion of freight in this district, the railroads not being able to handle it, which results in a loss not only to those operating the industries, but to the labor employed therein. Some of these railroads are owned by the same combinations of capital that own not only the furnaces and mines of the Pennsylvania district, but the ore mines of the Northwest, and the ships which transport the ore from the Lake Superior ports to the Lake Erie ports. It is apparent, therefore, on the face of it, that whenever there is a congestion of freight, whenever the output exceeds the capacity of the roads to transport, the independent operator, whether in coal, coke, or iron ore, is at a decided disadvantage. An open waterway to be used on equal terms alike by each and all would be of very great benefit, especially in such emergencies.

The transportation charged on iron ore from Duluth to Ashtabula by water, a distance of 1,000 miles, is eight-tenths of 1 mill per ton per mile. The cost of carrying coal the same distance by the Lakes is three-tenths of 1 mill per ton per mile. The cost of carrying coal to New Orleans from the Pittsburg district by water is six-tenths of 1 mill per ton per mile.

The cost of transporting commerce through the Erie Canal will be, according to the estimate of Colonel Symonds, when the canal is completed to a depth of 12 feet, fifty-two one-hundredths of 1 mill per ton per mile. This shows how remarkably cheap commerce can be carried by water.

The railroad rate on coal and ore across this portage, a distance by rail of 135 miles, is 90 cents per ton, or about 6⅔ mills per ton per mile.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman

if he has at hand the comparative figures of carrying the freight on the Great Lakes and on the large canals like the Erie Canal?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I have not, except the reference I have just made.

Mr. HINSHAW. Nevertheless, the charge on the canals is much smaller than for a similar carriage by rail?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Now, is it not possible to save to the consumers of this country the difference in the cost on transporting this 50,000,000 tons of commerce over this portage? If it is, why should there be objection to it? The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the other day said that we ought to have this canal, but it should be a governmental canal. I admit that if it were possible to have the Government undertake this work at once and finish it in a reasonable time I would gladly favor that proposition.

Gentlemen on this floor who have come before the Rivers and Harbors Committee year after year urging projects for development of rivers and harbors in their sections know that it is not an easy matter to secure favorable action on a project involving $35,000,000.

They are now pressing for recognition many meritorious projects. One is to deepen the Ohio River to a depth of 9 feet from Pittsburg to Cairo, a most worthy project, one strongly urged, and one that will be of very great benefit to all the industries along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and yet that has been delayed. The upper Mississippi River needs improvement, and this has long been urged. In the State of Texas there are many rivers which need improvement, and I might mention many others in different sections of the country.

The River and Harbor Committee has before it projects having the favorable indorsement of the Corps of Engineers and of the Secretary of War, which, if adopted, would require an expenditure of $450,000,000. We have taken on the project of building the Panama Canal, for which an expenditure of something like $200,000,000 will have to be made. This will be all the Government can undertake in the way of waterway improvements for many years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can he tell the House what prospect there is of having a river and harbor bill this session?

Mr. DAVIDSON. He can not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Can the gentleman tell the House what justification there is for the present policy of his party? You have expended four hundred millions, approximately, on the Navy in four years, and only about that amount of money in the entire history of the country has been expended on river and harbor improvements.

Mr. DAVIDSON. He can not without going into a lengthy discussion of the policy, and this he can not undertake at this time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason I ask the gentleman these questions is because he is urging that we should nationally incorporate a company for the building of canals, and he is urging that because the Government is not doing any rapid work on rivers and harbors. Is not the true remedy to bring in the right sort of a river and harbor bill? And I will guarantee, if it is brought in, that the Members on this side of the aisle will support the gentleman in that kind of legislation.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes; I think that would be a wise thing to do. In my judgment, no greater benefit can come to the country than the development of its waterways, and I desire to see this done as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit another question. We always have an expression that everybody is in favor of it, but somehow or other you people who are charged with legislation every year refuse to do anything of that sort, and I would like to know when you are really going to begin?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the gentleman, but he ought to remember that I am an "insurgent," and perhaps not in a position to give information on that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I congratulate the gentleman on his being one.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I might say to the gentleman that one very good reason why it perhaps is not advisable to report a river and harbor bill at this time is that of the money heretofore appropriated for such improvements something like $30,000,000 remains still unexpended, a sum sufficient to keep the Engineer Corps of the Army busy for the next year at least.

I believe the improvement of the waterways of the country is the best possible way to regulate the freight rates of the country. A waterway properly improved does more, in my judgment, to regulate the cost of transportation of the products of the country than any legislation that Congress or the States can enact.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I yield first to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that he believes the waterways are the best regulators of freight rates. Suppose this canal is turned over, as it could easily be done, to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, how much would it regulate freight rates?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, if the Pennsylvania Railroad Company invested $35,000,000 in this canal it would have to do business in order to get something back as interest on its investment, and if the Pennsylvania Railroad Company built the canal I suppose it would build it for the purpose of carrying commerce, and to do that it would necessarily have to make rates sufficiently low to compete with the railroads, and thereby secure business sufficient to make a return on the money invested. I do not believe, however, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will ever get control of this project. I do know, as chairman of the committee before which this project has been pending during four Congresses, that the only opposition that has ever come to it has come from the railroads, and it has been reported to the House in spite of the opposition of the railroads. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has just referred to the importance of waterways as regulators of railway transportation rates. In connection with that I would like to ask the gentleman how they could regulate railway transportation rates without competing with railways?

Mr. DAVIDSON. It would be impossible, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman how any canal company would compete or could compete with the railways unless it was to its interest to do it. Then I would like to ask him how this particular canal company could find it to its interest to enter into a fight to the death with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company?

Mr. DAVIDSON. It is beyond dispute that a waterway is the cheapest possible mode of transportation. That this canal, when constructed, can transport freight across that portage at a less rate than the railway company is transporting it there is no question. The canal company would compete with the railway cost not necessarily to the death, but in a legitimate manner for the business incident to that territory.

There are 50,000,000 tons of commerce crossing that portage annually. The great bulk of it is commerce that always seeks a waterway when possible. It is the heavy, bulky commerce which is not as profitable for a railroad to handle as is the higher class of freight.

All history bears out the assertion that wherever waterways have paralleled railroads the waterways have prospered, because they have carried the heavy, bulky commerce, while on the other hand the railroads have not suffered, because along the waterway, by reason of the fact that they could get the raw material cheaply transported, industries have sprung up, the raw material has been converted into finished products, and these have been carried by the railroads under the higher class and at a higher rate of freight.

The waterways of Germany, which have been developed to a remarkable degree by that country, carry the cheap, bulky products of freight. The railroads carry the finished products to the factories, and both the railroads and the waterways prosper.

The Erie Canal has made central New York a hive of manufacturing industries, and the New York Central Railroad, paralleling the canal, has benefited therefrom.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman pardon another question? Has not the condition of affairs which he describes always come from free waterways?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Not always.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, let me say to the gentleman, as far as I know every private canal company in America has been gobbled up by the railroads except the New York State system, and they have been made over by the State of New York at the expense of its own people. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question: Which will, in his opinion, cost the most money originally—to dig this canal or to build a single-track railroad alongside where the canal will be dug?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I submit to the gentleman I know nothing about the construction of railroads.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit to the gentleman that to dig the canal will cost a great deal more than to build a single-track railroad. Now, then, if a private corporation owns the canals, it must earn a fairly remunerative rate to reimburse it for the interest on its plant and for the charge of maintenance; and the canal company, which under this bill is permitted to charge anything it pleases, subject to the review of the Interstate Commerce Commission just as railroads are, could, as far as the dividend upon the original plant is concerned, build the canal and charge an equal amount that any railroad charged, on the ground that it costs more to build a canal than it costs to build a railroad.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The original cost of the canal would exceed the cost of a railroad, but the amount of business it would do would be far in excess of that which a single-track railroad could do.

Mr. HINSHAW. The cost and expense of maintaining a canal would be much less, would it not, than the cost of maintaining a railroad, so that the dividend question is not the same as in the building of a railway?

Mr. DAVIDSON. That is true. There is no equipment to a canal except its locks and the machinery to operate them. The canal becomes an open waterway, and every man who owns a boat is permitted to operate thereon.

Let me come to the terms of the proposed bill. It gives to certain persons named authority to construct a canal from Lake Erie to the Ohio River. I want to say to the Members of the House that although this bill on the face of it presents no amendments as coming from the committee, the bill is, in fact, a committee bill—a substitute for No. 6003. The bill 6003 was considered by the committee at length, various amendments were made by the committee and many of them in opposition to the wishes of the incorporators. At the committee's request, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] reintroduced the bill, so that it comes before the House now in the form of H. R. 14396.

Now, in this bill are many provisions which were not contained in the original. This bill gives to the incorporators the same general power as is given to all corporations.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am in thorough sympathy with the purposes of this bill. I notice in the first section of the bill it confers upon the company unlimited power to buy and own and hold real estate. I do not believe it to be a wise policy to permit corporations generally to acquire and hold real estate as a matter of investment. I think in most States the power to own and hold real estate is limited to purposes that are reasonably necessary to carry out the object of the corporation. I believe there ought to be a limitation upon the power of this company to acquire and hold real estate. It is a corporation that is perpetual in its tenure, and it seems to me that the power to own real estate ought to be limited to the purposes that are reasonably necessary for the objects of its creation.

Mr. DAVIDSON. It will be noticed at the end of section 1 there is a provision covering that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That does not apply. I have read section 1 quite carefully, and I am satisfied they could acquire and own practically all of the good investment property in the city of Cleveland and in the city of Pittsburg, too, in so far as the power conferred upon it by this bill goes.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I do not think it could do that, and I do not think there would be any disposition to do it. Their power to own real estate must be such as will enable them to carry out the purpose for which the company is created.

The canal itself will extend for a distance of about 100 miles. Forty-six miles of this distance will be covered by canalizing the Beaver and Mahoning rivers, the Beaver River running into the Ohio River about 23 miles below or down the river from Pittsburg. The Ohio River will be made use of below Pittsburg to the mouth of the Beaver River, and the various other rivers running in there will be made use of in the same connection. The distance up those rivers is 46 miles.

Then we come to the summit level and Lake Erie section, a distance of 53 miles across the summit or table-lands and down to Lake Erie on the other side. The distance across the summit level will be 31 miles, and within that distance will be a lake or reservoir 8 miles in length.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. An artificial lake?

Mr. DAVIDSON. An artificial lake. The highest point above Lake Erie is 327 feet, and the highest point above the Ohio River is 321 feet. There will be thirty-three locks in all, each of a 20-foot lift, the length of the locks being 340 feet, the width between walls 45 feet, and a 12-foot depth over the miter sills. This will be the canal when constructed. The capital stock of the company has been limited to $300,000 of stock and $300,000 of bonds per mile. The restriction thereon is most severe. It is that the capital stock shall not exceed $300,000 for each mile of canal proposed to be constructed. The bonded and other indebtedness is not to exceed $300,000 per mile—

So that the sum total of stock issued and debt created shall not exceed $600,000 per mile of canal proposed to be constructed; and the amount of debt created by the issue of bonds shall in no case exceed the amount of stock subscribed for and fully paid in, in cash, and bona fide expended in the promotion, maintenance, and construction of the said canals and works, and in no event shall the stock issued and debt created be in larger amounts than may be necessary to construct, equip, maintain, and operate said canal and works.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has said that the total capitalization in stocks and bonds is restricted in the bill to $600,000 per mile?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I would like to ask if the committee has received any estimate of the cost of construction per mile or the average cost of construction on the whole 100 miles of the canal?

Mr. DAVIDSON. It is estimated the cost of construction will be between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000. Then there are additional works—docks, etc., to be constructed, land to be purchased for the watershed, to conserve the waters, to make reservoirs, and all that sort of thing. The original bill provided that they should have $500,000 stock and $500,000 bonds per mile, but we believed that $600,000 for the two were enough, and we have limited it to that amount.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The estimated cost of construction will be about $400,000 per mile on the whole 100 miles, or $40,000,000 for the whole?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Was it the opinion of the committee that the other $20,000,000 authorized would be required for the additional equipment of the canal system?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Some of it, I would say to the gentleman, would be necessary; just how much we do not know. We thought it would be absolutely impossible for us, as a committee, to figure out exactly what it would cost. We could not tell, and we felt that the additional $20,000,000 was sufficient to cover all exigencies which might arise.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. How much leeway does the committee give to the company in the $20,000,000—five or ten millions or more, if necessary, or how much?

Mr. DAVIDSON. That was largely a question of individual judgment. We could not tell; it was absolutely impossible for the company to tell. This is the estimate as to about what the project will cost.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Was the estimate made by engineers in the employ of those proposing to build this canal?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Did the committee receive any estimates from any engineers of the Army or of the Navy or from any independent source?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Oh, no; except those employed by the State of Pennsylvania. Originally the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania appropriated $10,000 and that was spent in this survey. The estimates were made by their own engineers.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman one further question. Is there any power reserved to any officer of the Government in this bill to prevent the capitalization up to the full extent of $60,000,000?

Mr. DAVIDSON. No; there is none.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Does it not occur to the gentleman that it might be well to give some officer of the Government power to supervise the issue of stocks and bonds, so that the public, later on, in paying the rates, would know that they were reasonable rates upon the capital invested?

Mr. DAVIDSON. No; I do not think so. The Interstate Commerce Commission, through section 9 of this bill, is given absolute control over this canal company.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. So far as the rates are concerned?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes; and so far as their regulations, rules, or practices may affect interstate commerce. In passing upon the reasonableness of a rate or practice the Commission will have the power to inquire into the actual cost of the construction of the canal. To determine whether the tolls charged are reasonable or otherwise, the Commission must know how much capital is actually invested in the enterprise, and their decision would be based on those facts regardless of the amount of stocks and bonds that might be outstanding. Under the limitations and restrictions imposed it will be noticed that the stock and bond issue can not exceed the amount actually paid in and necessarily used for the promoting, constructing, operating, and maintaining of the property.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. The Commission would be obliged to make that investigation if complaint was made against the tolls charged.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Can not we just as well allow the Secretary of War to supervise the issue of stocks and bonds invested, instead of compelling the Interstate Commerce Commission later, in deciding what a reasonable rate was, to determine how much cash had actually been invested?

Mr. DAVIDSON. We did not think so. We thought it was much better to leave it in this way, not dividing that power between any two Departments, but putting that power entirely in one Department of the Government. We do invest the Secretary of War with the power to supervise the plans, and we say that the work shall not be constructed until the plans have been approved. We put the company under the control of the Light-House Board, so far as lights and signals are concerned, and so forth.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that this company has employed the ablest engineers that could be had anywhere in the country, and that the testimony shows they have already expended a hundred thousand dollars in engineering work for getting estimates?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the other day, when this question was thrown into the House, touched upon the power that was given to the Commission under section 11 to alter highways, railroad bridges, and other property and works.

I submit, gentlemen, that that authority is absolutely necessary for this company in order that it may construct this great project. It is no greater authority than is given to a railroad company when it builds through your State or through mine. The right of eminent domain is given, and the right to alter highways goes with it. The right to absorb private property goes with it, and all those things which are absolutely necessary and which would be done if the Government built this canal. No private interest can suffer more by the construction of this canal by a corporation created under an act of Congress than if the improvement was made by the Government itself.

It is true that it may interfere with some railroad running up that valley. I have no doubt it will. That was the argument made before the committee during the last Congress at the hearing on this bill. Very strenuous objection was made to the bill because it would interfere with railroads that were now located across and along the Beaver River. There is that objection, but we believe that this great undertaking should not be handicapped, should not be stopped simply because a railroad has built its way across that river or up that valley. If the Government was to build it, it would remove that railroad to one side wherever it was necessary. Then why should not this corporation have the same right, a right absolutely essential, if the work is to be undertaken at all?

And remember that every provision in this bill which gives authority to interfere with property carries with it the remedy, the right for damages, and that right is to be enforced in the State courts in the local district where the property is situated. We do not take any man away from his home into a foreign district or into a Federal court to litigate the question of his damages. The only place where the power of the Federal court is invoked is in the case of the removal or the alteration of a railroad or bridge where there is no State law applicable to the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Who is to determine whether there is any State law applicable thereto?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I suppose the court, just the same as the jurisdiction of the court on any question would be determined. If they brought their action in the wrong court, it would be thrown out upon the decision of the judge.

Now, we give them the power to control the flood waters of these streams, but we reserve the right to maintain the navigability of all these streams, and we especially provide that in using this water they shall not impair the navigability of any river or stream, or diminish at any time the water supply of any city, village, or municipality below the reasonable requirements of such city, village, or municipality, or in any manner pollute the same.

We have inserted in this bill a provision that the tolls shall be reasonable. We believed that that was a safe provision. We provide an absolute ironclad restriction against rebates of any kind, and we have included in the bill the same provision that was in the Hepburn railway rate bill which passed this House, that the rate shall not be changed except upon due notice; that there shall be no "midnight tariffs" put into effect; that a change shall not be made except upon thirty days' notice, except that in an emergency, upon application to and approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, they may be made the same as provided in the Hepburn bill.

We give them six years in which to commence this work and fifteen years in which to complete it. We do not believe that is an unreasonable time. It is a large undertaking. It will take a large amount of capital. The proposition that we were discussing the other day on the floor and for which many gentlemen voted, to build a dam or two at Muscle Shoals for water-power purposes, gave the company two years in which to commence and five years in which to complete that work. The Keokuk dam privilege, that was given in the last Congress, provided five years in which to commence and ten in which to complete, so that the time given here is not unreasonable.

The corporation will be subject to the laws of the States in which it operates, the same as any other foreign corporation doing business in the State. Whatever the State laws are in Ohio or Pennsylvania with reference to taxing foreign corporations doing business in the State will apply to this. The tolls to be charged on commerce in the States is subject to the control of the State laws. All suits for damages are to be brought in the State courts. We provide that at the expiration of fifty years the Government may acquire this property and make it a free canal. That, I will say to the House, is a new provision. It was not in the bill when it was reported by this committee in the last Congress. They represent to us that it is absolutely necessary to have a time fixed before which the Government can not take it, except as a military necessity—which they can always do—in order to give a financial standing to the bonds and stock to be issued by the company. We believe that, all things considered, fifty years is not an unreasonable time. We believe they are entitled to this as long as it is open to commerce, as long as the rates are regulated by the Government and subject to the control of the Government. We do not believe in view of the other great waterways of the country which need appropriations from the Treasury that our country will be in a position where it will be able to take over this work inside of fifty years. Therefore we have inserted that provision.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Yes.

Mr. LAWRENCE. When the Government takes the canal over is there any provision for compensation which the Government shall pay when it takes charge of it?

Mr. DAVIDSON. The price is to be fixed by arbitrators, one to be chosen by the company, one by the Government, and those two to choose the third, and in considering the value of the property to be taken no valuation shall be given to the franchise or good will or the earning capacity. We believe that with that restriction the Government is perfectly protected.

Now, there is a provision to which I want to ask the attention of the House for a moment, because possibly there may be some Members who feel that the committee had not taken the right position on this question. We provide in section 18 that the canal and other works authorized shall be lawful military and post routes, which the United States may forever use for the transportation of mails, dispatches, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private parties for the same service.

Now, I will say to the House that the bill as presented to our committee proposed that the military supplies and mails, etc., should be carried for the Government at one-half of the rates charged private persons.

Now, I do not know what the views of other gentlemen may be, but our position, unanimous I believe in that committee, was that the Government should not be a party to the rebate system [applause]; that the Government ought to pay just the same, no more and no less, as an individual. I do not believe in coming here one day and passing a bill that makes it absolutely unlawful for anybody to accept rebates from railroads, and on the next incorporate a company and compel it to give rebates to the Government to the extent of 50 per cent of the charge. Therefore we say that the Government shall pay just the same as an individual—no more, no less.

Based on the charges made for tolls by the old Pittsburg and Lake Erie Canal Company, it has been assumed that charges for tolls on this canal would not exceed 20 cents per ton. On the estimated business of 25,000,000 tons annually the receipts of the canal company would amount to $5,000,000. Deduct from this $1,000,000 estimated as the cost of maintenance and operation and you have left $4,000,000 as profit to the company, which is equal to a dividend of 10 per cent on a cost of $40,000,000, or 8 per cent on a cost of $50,000,000.

These figures are believed to be conservative, and show that the project is practicable from a financial point of view.

The cost of transporting the commerce through the canal would not exceed 20 cents per ton, making a total of 40 cents, against which the railways now charge 90 cents per ton.

It is believed that by the time this canal is completed and open for operation, and with the improvement of the Erie Canal to a depth of 12 feet, there will be developed a style of boat capable of operating successfully on the Great Lakes and drawing not to exceed 12 feet when loaded, so that it can operate through this canal and through the Erie Canal without transfer of cargo.

If this should prove true, there would be the additional saving to commerce of 15 cents a ton now paid for transfer and dock charges at Lake Erie ports, and in addition all boats operating on the Lakes and coming through to the Pittsburg district would receive their own fuel supply, a not inconsiderate factor in the cost of operating, at at least $1 per ton less than is now paid at Lake ports.

The benefit to commerce, therefore, from the construction of this canal will amount directly to a saving of from 50 cents to 65 cents per ton on all commerce carried across this portage, with the additional saving which will come to the entire country from having these two great waterway systems connected, thus forming a continuous waterway of 15,000 miles, with its corresponding effect upon all the railroad rates in conjunction therewith.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIDSON. For a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is anything in the bill that restricts the company from charging over 20 cents a ton?

Mr. DAVIDSON. No; we left the whole question of rates to the regulation and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the same as the rates of a railroad or any other common carrier are now or may hereafter be left.

The provision to place this company under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been very strongly opposed by the persons named in the bill as incorporators. They take the position that this company would not be a common carrier; that it would not engage in carrying commerce; that it would simply supply a waterway over which commerce would be carried by persons operating boats thereon; that the boats carry commerce, and that this company ought not to be subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We did not agree with their views on that proposition. We believe that the charge made for tolls by this canal company will be a charge on commerce; that it will be part of the cost of transporting commerce, and therefore it was eminently proper and right that such charges should be subject to review, and that power should be vested in somebody to control and regulate them.

We did not undertake to specify in just what way the Interstate Commerce Commission might have control over this corporation. In view of the legislation now demanded by the people and likely to be enacted by this Congress affecting railroads and their relations to the Interstate Commerce Commission, we believed it the better policy to recognize this canal company as a common carrier and invest the same power and control over it by the Interstate Commerce Commission as that Commission has or may at any time have over railroad corporations. By so doing whatever benefit comes to the people by reason of legislation which may be enacted to control and regulate railroads would also come to the people through application of the same legislation to this company.

The Committee on Railways and Canals has devoted much time to the consideration of this subject. The project is one of extreme importance. It will require the investment of a large amount of money. We have believed, on the one hand, this charter should grant sufficient powers and rights to enable those interested therein to carry out this great work. On the other hand, we have attempted to carefully safeguard and preserve the rights of individuals, of municipalities, and of public-service corporations. Some object to this measure because it grants a Federal charter.

Those interested maintain that considering the importance of the work and the amount involved it is decidedly to their advantage to have a Federal charter rather than to incorporate under the laws of either Ohio or Pennsylvania. Another reason for asking Congress for this favor is that the laws of neither of the States named makes provision for the merger or consolidation of canal companies. In the absence of such consolidation it would be necessary to have a separate corporation in each of the two States. The stocks and bonds issued by either of the corporations would only be secured by a part of the canal—that is, the portion lying in the State of that corporation. This not only would interfere materially with the control and management of the property, but make it absolutely impossible to find a market for the stock or bond issue. These are the reasons why Congress is asked to pass this bill. That it has the power to create such a corporation has been well settled by decisions of the Supreme Court, notably that of Luxton v. North River Bridge Company, in 153 United States, page 525.

The creation of this corporation imposes no burden on the public Treasury. It simply provides the machinery by which private capital may become invested in a work of great national importance and which in the end will be of great benefit to the people.

At this time when great aggregations of capital bid defiance to Federal control because they are creations of State legislation it seems to me as if this is a step in the right direction. I wish it were possible to compel every common carrier engaged in interstate-commerce business throughout the country to come to Congress for its authority to do business, not necessarily through the enactment of a private bill like this for each particular case, but under a general incorporation law, which law should provide in specific terms what the corporation could and what it could not do.

We have a national act for the incorporation of banks. Under it we have developed a splendid system of banking. A similar law for the creation of corporations doing an interstate-commerce business, either as common carriers, express companies, or insurance companies, could be made to safeguard and protect the people's interests to a much greater extent than is now possible.

In many of our States the main purpose seems to be to encourage the incorporation of companies simply for the fee which may be turned in to assist in maintaining the State government and without any regard to the interest of shareholders or the public generally.

In the absence, however, of a general law of the character I have described, I heartily favor the pending measure and trust it may have the support of this House.

I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it is not possible to have the time extended, for I can not discuss this matter in the short time I have.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended one hour, so that each side may have an hour and a half each instead of one hour.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think we better not do that. The bill has been pretty well discussed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for just a minute?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended forty minutes, twenty minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend the time for forty minutes, twenty minutes on each side. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why the House ought to adjourn to-day at an earlier hour than is customary, and this bill has stood in the way now of quite a number of others, and it ought to be disposed of. I will therefore have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am decidedly in favor of this bill, and while I dislike very much to disagree with the distinguished leader of the minority [Mr. WILLIAMS], I believe he was right when he said last Monday that this is purely a business question. These are his words:

> I hope that nobody will get it into his head that there is anything in the slightest degree of political or partisan character in this bill just because I who oppose it am the minority leader. I want every Republican in the House to look at it as it is, as a purely business matter.

I presume, sir, if he wishes every "Republican" to look at it as "a purely business matter," he does not object to me, as a Democrat, looking at it as "a purely business matter," and, sir, looking at it from that point of view, I am compelled to favor this measure. I live on the banks of the Mississippi River, in that great southern section of the country where we have some waterway development already and where we wish to have a great deal more. I believe that there is no way to regulate freight rates in this country half as well as by water competition. The rate question is to-day the most important question before the American people, and if we had our waterways as fully developed as they should be developed, and as they can be developed, and as I hope some day they will be developed, we would not have very much need for railroad rate legislation. [Applause.]

It is for that reason that I strongly favor this bill. These people propose to give us a magnificent waterway 12 feet deep connecting Lake Erie with the Ohio River, with the Mississippi River, with New Orleans, with the Gulf of Mexico, and they propose to expend from thirty-five to forty millions of dollars to do it. While I would rather see the Government do it, I know, as a business proposition, it will be fifty or seventy-five years before the Government will ever do it. Therefore, as a business man, I say let us permit these people to expend these $35,000,000 for the purpose of constructing a waterway which all of us must admit will be very beneficial in regulating freight rates throughout this country.

There has been no greater regulator of freight rates than the Erie Canal, that canal which was constructed by the State of New York so wisely many years ago, and on which that State has expended some $56,000,000 and is now expending an additional $101,000,000 to further enlarge and improve it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not the Erie Canal a free canal?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes; but it was not free until 1882, and it was built in 1817 to 1824. It had tolls on it all of those years, and in spite of the tolls the rates there were infinitely cheaper than ever they were by rail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One other question: Even during the time when the Erie Canal was not a free canal, did it ever undertake to charge tolls to compensate for anything more than the charge of maintenance and equipment?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I do not know that it did. I can not answer that question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a matter of fact, it did not.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Whether it did or not, it was a wonderful regulator of freight rates. And if we allow this canal to be constructed it will be a great regulator of freight rates. There is no comparison between the cheapness of water and rail transportation. An enormous traffic is now carried by several railroads over the proposed route of this canal, between Ashtabula and other points on Lake Erie and the Pittsburg district—probably 50,000,000 tons a year—and the charge is 6 to 7 mills per ton per mile. The water rate from Duluth to Ashtabula is three-tenths of 1 mill per ton per mile on coal and eight-tenths of 1 mill on iron ore, so that while it costs 80 cents for every ton of ore conveyed by water from Duluth to Ashtabula, a distance of 1,000 miles, it costs to carry that same ton of ore by rail from Ashtabula to Pittsburg—135 miles—about 90 cents per ton. In other words, it costs 10 cents per ton more to go 135 miles by rail than 1,000 miles by water. These are actual figures, and plainly show that it costs fully seven times as much to move iron ore by land as by water in that locality. On coal the disproportion is much greater, for the water rate is only 35 cents per ton to Duluth, or less by 55 cents per ton to go a thousand miles on the water than 135 miles by rail. On this commodity—coal—the rail rate per mile is just twenty times as high as the water rate. Hence it would appear that if the canal is constructed there would be such a great reduction in freight rates on both coal and iron, these two items of such tremendous importance to every citizen of this Union, that the benefit resulting from this canal would be incalculable. It is estimated that in a short while the freight carried through it would amount to 25,000,000 tons a year, and that after making full allowance for tolls and all expenses of every character the saving per ton would be at least 65 cents, or some $16,250,000 a year, which would go into the pockets of the American people in reduced prices on coal and iron. In addition there would be a similar reduction in all freights by rail.

Now, if these figures are correct, and after a very careful investigation I am convinced that they are, there can be no doubt in my opinion that it is good business policy for us to permit the construction of this canal. The objectors say that it should be built by the Government and not by a private corporation. I would indeed be pleased to see the Government construct it, but again we are confronted by the business proposition alluded to by my friend Mr. WILLIAMS. The Government has innumerable natural canals or rivers in every part of the Union, all of which have more or less commerce on them, and most of which are clamoring vociferously for large governmental expenditure. It will be many years before it is possible to improve the natural waterways already in existence, and in my judgment they present the first and most important claim upon our attention. The projects before the Rivers and Harbors Committee, which have received the approval of the Engineer Department and are now awaiting Congressional appropriation, amount to over $300,000,000. Many other important projects are being surveyed and investigated and talked about.

I wish to tell you just a little about the prospective things of the section of the country that I come from. I live on the Father of Waters, and being the representative of the father I take in all his children when I discuss this problem. Just a little, then, about the Mississippi Valley. Why, sirs, there is the Ohio River, which has a project for 9 feet of water between Pittsburg and Cairo. And if I lived on that river I wish to say to you that not one inch less than 9 feet would satisfy me. At the head of that river stands the imperial city of Pittsburg. Did you ever think of the commerce of the Pittsburg district? I visited that city last year and was absolutely staggered by it. We know things in this life by comparison. The commerce of the Pittsburg district is over 100,000,000 tons per annum. The water commerce of London is a little over 17,500,000 tons. The commerce of our metropolis, New York, is something like 17,398,000 tons. That of Antwerp is 16,721,000 tons. That of Hamburg is 15,853,000 tons. That of Hongkong is 14,724,000 tons. And that of the magnificent city of Liverpool 13,157,000. And Pittsburg, mind you, is only one of a number of fine cities on the Ohio River. That is why those people have there a $60,000,000 project.

Then there is the project which Mr. LORIMER and Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois, have been advocating so vigorously—14 feet of water from Chicago to the Gulf. My friends, can you conceive the magnitude of that project? A mighty stream running north and south through the very heart of our continent, wedding together the cool waters of the Lakes and the warm currents of the sunny Gulf; that stream which would place the cities of the mighty Mississippi on the shores of the Huron, the Erie, the Superior, and the Michigan, and that would put Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Duluth, Milwaukee, and Chicago on the Gulf of Mexico. That project will cost probably $100,000,000. It is certainly most worthy, and some day it is going to come.

Then our friends up in Nebraska and Missouri, although they have been keeping a little quiet of late, are going to be after the Rivers and Harbors Committee real soon with a project for protecting the banks of the great Missouri and giving 8 feet of water from Omaha to St. Louis—another $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. And the people of the upper Mississippi want 8 feet, very naturally, to St. Paul—another thirty or forty million dollars. And the Cumberland, the Tennessee, the Arkansas, the Ouachita, and the Red—all those great tributaries of the Mississippi—each calls for two or three or four or five million dollars. And they are all most worthy projects, which are coming some day. Moreover, we wish a few million dollars more for levees on the Mississippi River—about twenty millions. Now, put all these things together, and you will see that the really meritorious and worthy projects which are on the Mississippi River call for more than $300,000,000. I speak of these things, being familiar with them; but I know, from being a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for a number of years, that there are a great many most worthy projects along the Atlantic coast and the Gulf coast and the Lake regions and the Pacific slope and the vast interior river systems of the country. So that while $300,000,000 now stare us in the face, when we attempt to develop our waterways as they should be developed we will have more than three times $300,000,000 of projects.

Let me ask Mr. WILLIAMS, then, how he proposes to provide for all of these waterways under the present system of river and harbor legislation? For the past ten years the annual appropriations for rivers and harbors averaged $19,251,000—an amount actually less than 3 per cent of the total average annual appropriations for all purposes of government. It costs a considerable sum per year to maintain existing projects, and at the rate of $19,250,000 a year you can readily see that it will take a great many years to complete the projects now in hand without making any allowances at all for new ones. If I could be assured of a change in this policy, and that the annual appropriations would equal $50,000,000 instead of $19,250,000, I might be willing for the Government to undertake this canal and not grant the charter to a private company; but when confronted with the stern facts of the actual situation, I am convinced that it will be long years before any start whatsoever could be made on it by the Government, and that in the meantime, if we do not grant this charter, the people will be deprived of the great benefits resulting from the canal. For many reasons it would be better for the Government to own it, but as it is entirely impracticable for Congress to make the necessary appropriations within a reasonable time, I contend that it is far better to grant this charter and let it be built by private persons. Under the terms of the bill the Government can take ownership of the canal at the end of fifty years, and if it be constructed now by a corporation, I feel sure the citizens of the country will have an advantage of fifty years' use of it, for it will certainly be that long before the Government would construct it of its own motion.

I can not see the evils in this matter which many complain of. There are several precedents for such legislation in the Pacific railroads and the North River Bridge over the Hudson River. This canal proposition is sui generis; there is nothing like it in the Union that I know of. It proposes to connect the waters of Lake Erie with those of the Ohio River by a waterway 12 feet deep, passing through the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania. It would be controlled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, just as railroads are controlled, and would have no greater rights and immunities than the great Pacific railroads, chartered by the Government. The excuse for granting charters to those roads was the great public need thereof. Not only were charters granted to them, but immense bodies of land were donated in order to help their construction. No donation or grant is made to this canal, except the mere right to construct, and while under its power of eminent domain it can take such property as it needs for the canal bed, etc., full compensation must be made therefor.

The same governmental need which warranted charters to the Pacific roads and the North River Bridge Company exists in this case. This is in no sense of the term a local project, for it connects the entire lake system with the Mississippi Valley and the Gulf of Mexico. It would prove a freight regulator as far-reaching in its effects as the Erie Canal. By means of it boats could load anywhere on the Mississippi River or its tributaries; then pass through this canal, Lake Erie, the Erie Canal, and the Hudson River to the city of New York and points along the Atlantic coast, and vice versa. Coal and the innumerable products of the Pittsburg district—100,000,000 tons a year—which now go very largely to the Atlantic by a rail route across the mountains could be conveyed by an all-water route through this canal at a very great saving of cost to the consumer. The people of New Orleans now receive coal from Pittsburg, a distance of 2,000 miles, at a cost of six-tenths of one mill per ton per mile. Why should not the people of the Atlantic coast receive it at the same rate, over a much shorter distance, via this canal? If so, the saving in price to them would be incalculable.

New Orleans and Louisiana should feel the deepest interest in this canal. So should every dweller of the Mississippi and its valley. New Orleans is the entrepôt, the harbor, the ocean inlet and outlet for the commerce of 15,000 miles of navigable waters. Complete this canal and that mileage will be nearly doubled, and that commerce more than doubled. I can not understand how a man from the valley can oppose it.

Mr. Speaker, the rate question is to-day perhaps the most important one before the American people, and in my humble opinion, as above stated, there is no regulator of freights comparable to water competition. Wherever we have good waterways alongside of railroads there the freights are cheap. The people do not complain and there is no demand for the railroad rate bill. It is true, sir, that we can not have these competing waterways in every part of the nation, but it is also true that in three-fourths of our country there are rivers which might be improved at a reasonable cost, and which, if so improved, would be great carriers of freight and marvelous regulators of rates.

From a careful study of the subject I am convinced, sir, that the cost of freight by water does not exceed one-sixth of its cost by rail under favorable conditions. In other words, that the cost by rail is fully six times as great as that by water. Mr. E. R. Condor, an eminent English authority, estimates that rail transportation in England costs at least three and one-half times as much as transportation by canal, and in his calculation interest on the cost of the canal is included.

In France and Germany for many years there has been a very great development of waterways. All of their rivers have been deepened and improved and connecting canals have been constructed in many places. It is said that freight can be conveyed by water from practically every part of France and Germany to every other part. Let me quote from a recent excellent work on Modern Germany, published in 1905, by Mr. O. Eltzbacher. On page 231 et seq. he says:

> Recognizing the importance of cheap transport and of an alternative transport system which would bring with it wholesome competition, Germany has steadily extended, enlarged, and improved her natural and artificial waterways, and keeps on extending and improving them year by year; and if a man would devote some years solely to the study of the German waterways and make the necessary but very extensive and exceedingly laborious calculations, he would probably be able to prove that Germany's industrial success is due chiefly to cheap transport, and especially to the wise development of her waterways.
> Everywhere in Germany water transport is being developed with the utmost vigor and energy. On all the rivers and all the canals commercial and industrial activity is marvelously developing, and the development of water transport is becoming almost a sport, if not a passion, with the German business community.
> If it were not for the existence of the German waterways the German industries would certainly not be in the flourishing condition in which they are now. When ice closes the German rivers and canals the export and import trades are at once very seriously affected, and if the German waterways should be blocked for a whole year, the whole of Germany would probably be ruined, for Germany can not live without her waterways. Certain valuable products and by-products of the German mines and iron works, and the more bulky products of the chemical industries of Germany can, according to Major Kurs, who is a leading authority on inland navigation in Germany, only be sold in Germany and abroad owing to the cheapness of transport by water, and in many cases the profit is cut so fine that an increase of the freight charges by about one-fiftieth of a penny per ton per mile would inevitably kill important industries which, it seems, are at present killing the industries of countries competing with Germany. Thus Germany's industrial success is no doubt due to a very large extent, to the immense assistance which she receives from her waterways.

In my opinion, sir, we could well emulate the French and Germans in this wise policy, and I sincerely hope we will do so.

Mr. Speaker, the policy of Congress toward waterway improvement has been miserly in the extreme. During recent times river and harbor bills have been passed every three years instead of annually, as other great appropriation bills, and for the past ten years have averaged only $19,251,000 a year, as compared with $6,668,000 a year for fortifications; $24,870,000 a year for executive, legislative, and judicial expense; $66,958,000 a year for the Navy; $69,704,000 a year for the Army; $127,603,000 a year for the Post-Office; $143,242,000 a year for pensions.

In addition there is the further sum of $1,375,000 a year as a permanent annual appropriation for operating and care of certain canals and rivers.

The total appropriations for all purposes of government for the past ten years have averaged $711,930,000 a year, and of this sum less than 3 per cent has been expended on river and harbor improvements. Is this not a pitiful showing, considering the great importance of the subject? We receive practically all our revenues from commercial transactions, and yet to develop our remarkable commerce, which makes us the wonder of the world and which gives every year a balance of trade in our favor of half a billion dollars, we receive only this small sum, a fraction over $20,000,000—less than 3 per cent of the whole—for improving transportation throughout the length and breadth of our great country. Is this fair, Mr. Speaker? Is it treating our navigation interests right? You give to war and pensions—the reward of war—over $286,000,000 a year; over 40 per cent of our total appropriations; and for improving our waterways only a little over $20,000,000 a year—less than 3 per cent. Think of this, my countrymen, and let your voice be heard in loud and strong tones demanding a change. Do not be bashful, but ask what you need and must have. Insist that river and harbor bills be placed on a par with other great bills and adopted annually. Insist that instead of twenty they carry at least fifty millions a year.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe your party is giving to our waterways that "square deal" which is so dear to our President, Mr. Roosevelt; and if your policy is not changed materially you will hear from the American people in tones you can never misunderstand.

I am happy to say, sir, that my party is committed to a broad and liberal policy in this respect. The national Democratic platform of 1904 says:

> We favor liberal appropriations for the improvement of the waterways of the country. * * * We oppose the Republican policy of starving home development in order to feed the greed for conquest and the appetite for national prestige and display of strength.

Let us follow that platform. Let us have a river and harbor bill every year, and let it carry at least $50,000,000 a year. If we do that, our waterways will soon be in a higher state of development than those of our German and French neighbors, and the rate question will be forgotten. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi use some of his time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield twenty minutes, or such portion of that time as he may desire, to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is true that the Democratic party inserted in its platform the section read by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], but it did not insert in its platform a provision to turn over the toll-making and rate-fixing power of the Government to private corporations created by Congress. He is willing to wave aside fundamental principles, the traditions of our Government, and the Constitution of the United States to construct this canal, because, he says, it is a good business proposition. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to go that far. I rise not for the purpose of opposing the construction of this important canal, but for the purpose of opposing the granting of a charter by Congress for that purpose. This bill is no less than a monstrous proposition. It goes further than Congress has ever gone in granting charters to corporations. In its first section it grants certain powers and then all other powers granted to corporations in the United States. The power to construct not only a canal, but to construct a railway, to run a bank, to buy land, to borrow and loan money, to erect elevators, factories, and warehouses, to run a wholesale business—any power that is given to corporations in the United States in any State of this Union. The first section of the bill is as broad as language can make it, and there is nothing in it limiting the power of this corporation. Let us see how far Congress can go in granting charters to corporations. In the early days of our Government there was an act of Congress authorizing the charter of a United States bank. This was done in aid of executing the fiscal affairs of the Government.

Again, in 1862 the Government of the United States chartered a railway corporation to construct a railway across the continent to the Pacific Ocean. In the very caption of that bill you find language denoting that the railway is to be constructed for the purpose of a post-road and post-route and as a military highway necessary for the purposes of the Government. Here we are confronted with a proposition not to establish a post-road, not to establish a United States bank to aid in executing the fiscal affairs of the Government, but with the broad proposition to create a private corporation to regulate the interstate commerce of this country. The Supreme Court has never yet gone to the extent of recognizing such power. It has never gone beyond the declaration that Congress has the power to create such a corporation as is "necessary and proper" in executing some power expressly granted by the Constitution. Where is the necessity for incorporating this canal company to execute some power expressly granted? Mr. Speaker, the question of authorizing Congress to charter corporations arose in the Constitutional Convention. That power was proposed as a part of the Constitution, and the delegates to the Constitutional Convention voted it down. Let me read my authority for the declaration. Judge Story on the Constitution thus presents the point:

> Thus it was proposed in the convention to give a general power "to grant charters of incorporation," to "grant charters of incorporation in cases where the public good may require them and the authority of a single State may be incompetent," and "to grant letters of incorporation for canals."

A power proposed identical with the one in this case. This proposition made in the Constitutional Convention was rejected by the delegates, and they refused to confer the identical power which we are undertaking to exercise here to-day upon the Government of the United States. It has never been insisted upon before. No judge on the Supreme Bench has ever suggested going to such length as granting charters to private corporations for the mere purpose of giving them corporate life. Again, Judge Story says:

> In the convention two propositions were made and referred to a committee at the same time with the propositions already stated respecting granting of charters—"to dispose of the unappropriated lands of the United States" and "to institute temporary governments for new States arising therein." Both these propositions shared the same fate as those respecting charters of incorporation.

So, Mr. Speaker, it was proposed by the framers of the Constitution to give such power to Congress, and the delegates refused to confer it upon the National Government.

Here in the face of that fact we are to-day conferring upon these individuals the very powers that were refused to be given to Congress when the Constitution was framed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my friend a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; I yield just for a moment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was that question voted down after the convention had framed the commerce clause of the Constitution?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have not investigated that point, but it was voted down promptly when it was proposed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am familiar with that proposition, but with the other I am not. Now, will the gentleman tell me the difference between the Government building a railroad and building a canal, and then answer this question? I notice that the gentleman calls this a private corporation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; it is not private in the sense that it is a mercantile firm. It is to be controlled as to rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is to make certain tolls and is to be supervised by this Commission. Does not that make it, in one sense, a public corporation?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is a private corporation, because powers are conferred upon certain individuals, not only to construct this canal, but to do a mercantile business or any other business they see proper.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to get the gentleman's definition of what a private corporation is and what a public corporation is.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman says that this is a private corporation?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. This is a private corporation, because these individuals, after they incorporate and begin the work, must operate it, and have the right as private incorporators to sell this canal, and there is no restriction. A city municipality is an example of a public corporation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not public to the extent that the Government would have the right to control the tolls and the public use it?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It would be endowed with certain public uses. But I say there is nothing in it anywhere limiting the tolls that shall be charged by this company.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not as public as a railroad?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. As public as a railroad? Yes; but the railroads incorporated by the Government were private corporations in a strictly legal sense.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes. Is not this canal to be as public as a railroad?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think not. Because it has many powers conferred upon it not conferred upon a railroad.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not to be a public thoroughfare, and is it not to be controlled by the Government? I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I wanted to get his idea in regard to this.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is a public carrier, and I maintain that under its terms it will not be subject to the control of the Government as the gentleman thinks.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; for a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to ask the gentleman if the Texas and Pacific Railroad, by which his own State was developed, was not chartered by act of Congress?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It certainly was.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman maintain that it was unconstitutional?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not say that it was, because it was a military highway, post-road, and post route, and put upon those grounds.

Mr. OLMSTED. Section 18 of this bill makes this canal a military and post route just as much as the Texas and Pacific Railway was.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I understand it makes it a military highway and post route, but many other powers are conferred upon it that were not conferred upon the Texas and Pacific Railway, and have never been conferred upon corporations by Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. But the Government is not giving any land for the construction of this canal, as it did for the Texas and Pacific Railway.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The State of Texas also gave a lot of land for that project. But that does not affect the constitutionality, wisdom, or policy of the act.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would suggest to the gentleman that we hope if this bill becomes a law we will not have the scandal that grew out of some of the Pacific railroads.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Is the gentleman familiar with the decision in the North River Bridge Company case, where it is expressly held that Congress had a right to grant a right of this kind?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have that case before me, reported in 153 United States, and the only thing that it decides is that Congress has the power to grant to a corporation the right to construct a bridge across a navigable stream incidental to the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, and that is the only power that it bases the decision upon. That is the only authority the gentleman can find for this bill; and it does not justify him in the contention that this act is constitutional.

The decision referred to only confirmed the power of Congress to authorize the construction of a bridge across a navigable river, and went not a whit further.

The bill goes far beyond that. That act authorized the construction of a bridge across North River from New Jersey to New York, and that is all there was to it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Was not that an act granting the construction in the interest of interstate commerce of a bridge extending from one State to another, and does not this waterway extend from one State to another, and would it not necessarily, therefore, be in the interest of interstate commerce?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; that case was put upon such ground as I said. Now, let me show you what this bill contains. Let me call the attention of gentlemen to provisions of this act, as I fear that many have not read it. It expressly authorizes this corporation not only to cross the navigable streams, but to march across State lines, go into States, and to dry up the waterways, the domestic waterways that are not navigable streams, drain the lakes and bays in these two States, and to appropriate them, and to destroy the brooks and ponds in either of the States mentioned. Section 11 reads as follows:

SEC. 11. That the said company in the exercise of its right of eminent domain as granted in section 2 of this act may enter upon and take such lands as are necessary and proper for the making, maintaining, and operating of the canals and other works of the company hereby authorized, and it shall have the authority to alter any and all highways, railroads, and other works, either public or private, necessary for the making, maintaining, and operating of the canals and other works of the company, and whenever in the making, maintaining, and operating of the canals and other works of the company it shall be necessary to alter any highway, railroad, or other works, either public or private, and the said canal company and the owners of such highway, railroad, or other works can not agree as to the character—

Then they can proceed to condemn any land or property. Reading on from section 11 into section 12 we find:

SEC. 12. That the said company in the exercise of its right of eminent domain as granted in section 2 of this act may obtain, take, and use for the construction and operation of the said canal from the rivers, lakes, brooks, streams, water courses, ponds, reservoirs—

It ought to have included standpipes and hydrants. They are the only receptacles of water left out—and other sources of water supply sufficient water for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, operating, and using the said canals and works hereby authorized.

Why, Mr. Speaker, heretofore, whenever Congress has gone into a State and purchased real estate for any purpose for a custom-house building or for a public building of any sort, we have been required to do it with the permission of the State; and the legislature of the State has been called upon to give jurisdiction over that territory and authority for the sale of the land. Yet under this bill this corporation is authorized to proceed within the limits of the State and take the streams and the lakes and the waterways, real estate wherever it chooses, and appropriate it to its own use without even asking the State for permission.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MACON. Are either of the States through which this canal is to be cut objecting to this proposition?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not know whether they object to it or not. I say that the thing to do is to send this corporation to the legislatures of these States and let us see whether they object to it by their act of granting or not granting this charter.

Mr. MACON. Are not the Representatives of those States upon this floor voicing the wishes of the affected States upon that question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. They voice the sentiment of their Congressional districts, but they do not voice the sentiment of the legislative action of those States, and it can not be done in this way. Heretofore, whenever permission of a State has been required for an act of this sort, the corporations have been required to go to the legislature and get the solemn enactment of that body.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I have not heard a single Representative of the State of Ohio or the State of Pennsylvania, the two States through which the canal is to be cut, objecting to the passage of this bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will suggest to the gentleman that this is a matter for the legislatures of the States to determine.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think, with the great number of Representatives from Pennsylvania and Ohio, they would remain silent and not object if against their will a proposition of this character was being attempted to be put through their State?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The trouble with a great many gentlemen from those States is that they do not object to this high protective tariff and other kindred evils like that, and if the gentleman is going to follow them I suggest that he follow them in those matters.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, that affects the citizens of the United States. This particular project does not affect anybody except the citizens of the States through which this canal will run, unless it benefits the people elsewhere by giving them cheaper transportation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. This affects all the people of the United States, for when you overturn the traditions of the Government and the fundamental laws of the land you do injury to every citizen in this broad Republic.

Mr. MACON. Is this enactment against the law of the land or the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Does he think that the turning over of the river-and-harbor functions of this Government to this corporation is a local question or a national question?

Mr. MACON. I wish they would turn it over to the State of Arkansas. I think it could handle it with a great deal of satisfaction and with much benefit to the people that honor it with their citizenship.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But I apprehend that the gentleman would desire them to turn over a lot of money in addition to the power.

Mr. MACON. Of course, because we should like to see the development of rivers and canals to open up a waterway leading from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, because it would give better and cheaper transportation. I do not see how anybody can object to anything like that.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I suppose, then, the gentleman would turn over the Mississippi River and all the other arteries of commerce to a corporation, even if it cut through the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. MACON. No, sir; I just asked the gentleman if this was a violation of the Constitution. If it is a violation of the Constitution, then the courts will certainly call a halt upon it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield further. I think I have made it clear to almost everyone else around me that it does violate the Constitution of the United States, and if the gentleman will take the pains to read my speech to-morrow I think he will agree with me then.

Mr. MACON. Then no harm will come from it, because if what the gentleman says is true the canal can not be built.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. With all due respect to the gentleman, that point is almost absurd.

Mr. MACON. In the gentleman's estimation, but I do not think it is in the estimation of the courts or to intelligent gentlemen upon this floor.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The point really seems too plain to me for argument.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have here Story on the Constitution. I want to hear the gentleman from Texas on this law point and on that section of the bill. Now, here is what Judge Story says:

Congress may therefore authorize the making of a canal as an incident to the power to regulate commerce, where such canal may facilitate the intercourse between State and State.

That is from the same book which the gentleman read from a few moments ago.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; but does it say that Congress may organize a corporation like this?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. May authorize it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. May authorize a canal—yes, it can do that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have built public roads—the Cumberland road—and we have built military roads, and we have built a great many governmental things. The regulation of Federal commerce is a great Federal function, and it can be done by building canals, improving rivers, and so forth. Now, the gentleman is a good lawyer, and hence I am asking him this question: Where does he get the law to deny the power of Congress to issue this charter to build this canal to facilitate commerce between the Lakes and the Ohio River?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will be patient and listen to me, I think I will demonstrate that to him, because I think he is a good lawyer. We are in this bill exercising the broad power of creating corporations regardless of carrying out any provision of the Constitution, express or implied.

In the case of McCulloch against Maryland, in a luminous opinion, Chief Justice Marshall clearly lays down that the power of establishing a corporation is not a distinct and substantive power, but only the means of carrying into effect other powers which are substantive, whenever it becomes an appropriate means of exercising any of the powers given by the Constitution that may be exercised by the Government. Whenever it becomes an appropriate means of exercising any power of the Government then the authority may be exercised, and only then. The court has never gone further. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question: Where is the construction of this canal or the organization of this corporation an appropriate means of exercising any power of government?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will answer the gentleman the best I can. The Federal Government can build this canal, and we are building one in Panama now. And instead of the Federal Government undertaking to take the people's money and build it—a canal—in this case we give the right to certain individuals, and incorporate those individuals under a certain chartered name, and these private parties take their money and build it. We simply delegate the Federal authority to do what the Government itself can do.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If you put it upon that ground, under the power of interstate commerce, that Congress ought to take charge of this canal and build it and appropriate the money, I agree that we have a warrant to do it, and I do not know but what I would vote for that sort of a measure; but I am standing here to-day declaiming against creating a corporation and endowing them with the power of fixing tolls and controlling the commerce of this country and against abdicating the functions of this Government in that regard, when it is not necessary and proper as a means of exercising some function of government. We are embarking in the corporation-creating business.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do not we do that in the case of railroads and are we not trying to regulate those railroads now? Here is a canal built for the same purpose as the railroads, which the Federal Commission can fix rates for by this bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; and we have been struggling for years to regulate the railroads and we have failed, and that is one of the reasons why I say this bill should not be passed. However, the railroad corporations were not created as a means of executing in interstate-commerce clause, but as post routes and military necessities.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But are we to lose the benefit of this canal simply because we have not been able up to this time to regulate the railroads? Are we going to lose the benefit of the canal because it might get into the hands of bad men?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We will deny it under the powers given in this bill. Let the States authorize it; Congress should remain out of the corporation business. Let me touch on a few more features of the bill, and I shall have to decline to yield further.

The language creating this corporation confers tremendous powers upon private individuals, and yet there is not one word of limitation in it prohibiting them from selling the canal and all their rights and franchises to one of the great railways of this country this very afternoon or to-morrow or any other time. There is no restriction upon it. They can begin their work; they can organize after so much money has been paid in, and then they can transfer this canal to any railroad corporation in the country or they can build it and then close it, not even being required to operate it.

There is nothing in it to prevent the canal company from selling its property and franchises to a parallel and competing company if they desire. The chief objection I have to it is that it turns over this great power of interstate commerce to a corporation as an agent of the Government, and authorizes that corporation to regulate interstate commerce without fixing any limitation upon the charges, except those that are fixed by the corporation itself. It farms out governmental functions that should be left with Congress and preserved to the people.

To demonstrate that read the language of the bill as contained in section 17. Some gentleman has said that this corporation is restricted to "reasonable charges" for carrying commerce over its bosom. I deny emphatically, and say that it is not restricted to "reasonable charges" except in so far as it shall say itself that those charges are reasonable. Here is the language of section 17:

> That the said company may demand, take, and recover for its own proper use, for all persons and things of whatsoever description transported upon the said canals and works, or in vessels and craft using the same, such reasonable charges or tolls as may by its by-laws be determined.

"Such reasonable charges or tolls as may be determined by such corporation;" not reasonable charges and tolls as prescribed by the State legislature, as prescribed by Congress, but such reasonable charges as the corporation itself shall fix and determine shall be charged on the canal under its by-laws.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. A question.

Mr. PALMER. If the charges are reasonable, what difference does it make whether they are fixed by the company or by the United States or the State legislature?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The language does not presuppose that they will be reasonable, but says that if the company shall designate them to be reasonable they shall be accepted as reasonable.

Mr. PALMER. Does the gentleman think that would be conclusive—because the company fixed it?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. As far as the power of Congress or the legislature is concerned, they might fix an unreasonable charge and call it reasonable under their by-laws, and there would be no power to reach them in the Government—State or Federal.

Mr. PALMER. Is not the Interstate Commerce Commission authorized to supervise the reasonableness of the charge?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I say not. I have read that language, and it simply places the canal in general language under the Interstate Commerce Commission, but does not authorize that body to fix the charges on the canal. This very section here would control and leave it absolutely with the corporation itself to say what charges are reasonable.

Mr. PALMER. For what purpose is it put under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, if not to fix the reasonableness of the charge?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, for various purposes—to make reports, to publish rates, and a number of things of that sort. This bill authorizes them to "change" their rates, not to raise them or to lower them, but to "change" them, and all in the world the Interstate Commerce Commission can do is to waive the thirty days' time when they want to "change" the rates.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOWIE. Can not the bill be amended so as to meet the objection stated by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. About the only way it could be amended would be to send it to the State legislature and let them authorize the incorporation of this company. Congress ought not to go into the business of granting charters to such corporations as this. We have never done it except in the two notable instances of the creation of the Bank of the United States and the great military highways and post routes that have crossed this country from one ocean to the other. We have never gone one step beyond that in granting the authority of the Government.

No, this bill can not be amended so as to commend itself to me; it can not be so amended as to commend itself to any Democrat or any gentleman who still believes in the efficiency of the Constitution, who believes in the traditions of our fathers, and in adhering to what was enacted in the Constitutional Convention on this identical question. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that this bill is reported by the Committee on Railways and Canals, and I especially appreciate the feelings of my valued friend, the chairman, concerning it, but I am free to say that I can not vote for this measure as it now stands. It must be amended, very thoroughly amended, before I would feel justified in giving it my vote.

I call the attention of the House to the language of the first section, defining the powers of the proposed corporation. Under this section this corporation is granted power not only to dig and operate a canal, but also to engage in any other business. Nowhere is there any requirement that the land or other property it may acquire shall be only such as may be necessary for constructing and operating a canal. It can—> make and use a common seal, receive and acquire, by purchase or otherwise, real and personal property and rights of property, and may hold, use, lease, sell, mortgage, encumber, charge, pledge, grant, assign, and convey the same, and generally have and exercise all the powers usually granted to and vested in corporations of the United States of America.

Thus far this section gives the proposed corporation full power to engage in any sort of business—merchandising, mining, or manufacturing—and the remaining words of the section do not diminish this power, the remaining words being simply "and especially full powers to carry out the purposes of this act."

In addition to the power given by the first section of the bill, the second section gives the corporation the power also of eminent domain, so that this corporation, under the language of these two sections, would have the right not only to construct the canal, but also to build elevators, warehouses, or any other structures and to engage in any business in which it may please to engage. This view is strengthened by a reading of section 13. In that section it is provided that—

> The said company may construct, maintain, acquire, operate, and lease, or otherwise dispose of the terminals, docks, harbors, piers, wharves, elevators, warehouses and appurtenances, and telegraph and telephone lines along the said canals that may be necessary or useful in the construction, operation, and the maintenance thereof, etc.

The elevators, warehouses, etc., need not be "necessary;" it is sufficient if they be simply "useful."

The company may also—develop, acquire, use, and dispose of any motive power whatsoever in connection with or as part of the works herein authorized.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, would not that be confined under the terms of the act to all the appurtenances necessary in the carrying on of the canal work, and disposal of any of those things would be wholly that which they had acquired in connection with the work itself?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any statute of the United States or of any provision of the Constitution of the United States which would put an implied construction upon the general language of the first section so as to limit the proposed corporation in its purchases and use of land and other property to the purposes for which the corporation is to be organized, to wit, the construction and maintenance of a canal. The first section allows them to engage in any business that they please.

Section 14 provides that—

The said company may take, use, occupy, and hold, but not alienate, so much of the public beach or beach road—

What beach road is this? Does not the legislature of Ohio or the legislature of Pennsylvania know better what beach road is to be interfered with here than we do, who know absolutely nothing about the physical characteristics of the territory in question? The company may also take, use, occupy, and hold so much of the—lands covered with the waters of the rivers, lakes, brooks, streams, water courses, reservoirs, or ponds on or at which the said canals may start from, traverse, cross, or terminate as may be necessary for the wharves, docks, piers, buildings, or other works of the company, etc.

Under this clause they can take all of the available harbor lands on Lake Erie, which the canal "starts from," and also all the available lands at the other end where it "terminates." They can take all harbor facilities, erect elevators and warehouses, buildings, or "other works"—do as they please. "Or other works of the company." What are the "other works" of this supposed canal company to be?

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what has been said here about the bill giving power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates and charges on the proposed canal, it is my judgment that the bill does not confer authority upon any tribunal to regulate the rates and fares on interstate traffic. Section 17 provides that the company may demand and collect reasonable charges without discrimination between shippers, and then contains this proviso:

Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow changes upon less than the notice herein specified [which in this section is thirty days] or modify the foregoing requirements in respect to publishing and posting of such schedules.

This section 17 is the particular and only section of the bill which relates specifically to charges and fares, and the proviso simply empowers the Interstate Commerce Commission to modify the foregoing requirements, but only "in respect to publishing and posting of schedules." Nowhere does this section expressly or impliedly confer authority upon the Commission to fix rates on the canal.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, section 9 provides that the said company shall be subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission "the same as if it was a railroad corporation and shall make such sworn statements and reports as may be required by the said Commission." Well, to-day the law is that the Interstate Commerce Commission can not control rates or railroads. Are we to guess that the law is to be changed? We are guessing or propose to guess by this bill that another law will hereafter be enacted which will confer jurisdiction on the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate rates on railroads, and that then the Commission will thereby have power also to fix rates on this canal. Saying that the "company" shall be subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that it shall make such "sworn statements and reports as may be required by the Commission," is not saying that the Commission shall have authority to regulate rates and charges. Taking the two sections together as they now stand there is no power whatever proposed to be given to the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate the rates and fares upon this canal. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time has each side left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much has the other side?

The SPEAKER. Twelve minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Could not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] occupy part of the time now and close the case for the affirmative?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I think we are entitled to close.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman from Mississippi must be joking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it a case of both "closing and disclosing." I want the case for the affirmative disclosed if possible. Mr. Speaker, the other day I spent some time trying to the best of my ability to disclose the remarkable powers furnished by this charter to this corporation. I shall not dwell upon that subject any more. I shall devote myself now to the fundamental principles involved in this sort of legislation. My friend the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] a moment ago quoted me as having said that this measure was a nonpartisan question, and it is a nonpartisan question. I am not appealing to a single man on this side of this Chamber to vote for or against this bill because of political reasons. I have been trying to appeal to Members on the other side of the Chamber to vote upon this bill for nonpolitical reasons. I did try to get them to forget that the humble individual who happened to oppose this bill happened at the same time to be the leader of the minority in this House. I would scorn to put this bill upon the footing of a partisan or political question. It amounts to something higher than that. It amounts to a question of an attack upon the fundamental principles of right government, and it ought to surpass all partisanship in the world.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON], who is always clear and always courteous, has shown in his usual manner the importance of this scheme. Its very importance rings an accusation against the bill damning in its character. It is so important that it is a national and governmental affair, and is not an affair to be carried out by a private corporation for its own profit. Why, Mr. Speaker, on this side of the Chamber this morning a friend of mine said: "John, what is your opposition to this bill? They are going to do it for nothing. It is not going to cost the Government of the United States a cent." Oh, my friends, whenever Pittsburg does anything for nothing let me know and let me know all about it right early in the morning. [Laughter.] And whenever a private corporation organizes itself with immense capital and wants to do something for nothing I want to ask the question, first, "Will it cost the Government anything?" That is a little bit of a question, and after I get through with that I want to ask, "Will it cost the people anything?" And that is a great big question. I dare say there is not a man on either side of this Chamber fool enough to think there can be organized in the district of my friend [Mr. DALZELL] of Pennsylvania a corporation to carry on a canal or other business for purely philanthropic and altruistic purposes, especially if it be the business of digging a canal to compete with a railroad ready and able to buy the canal out. I dare say there is not a man on this floor who does not know at the bottom of his heart that if this charter was put up for sale to-day it would be worth four or five million dollars in the market to the men who are going to undertake the project, whether for the purpose of digging a canal and working it and charging tolls upon it at the highest possible legal rate, or for the purpose of leasing the canal afterwards to a railroad or for the purpose of selling the canal afterwards to the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, or any of the other cognate railroads that are interested in transportation down that valley. So that the very reason I am opposed to the bill is the immense importance of the canal both to the lower Mississippi Valley and the upper lakes of the country. It is so important that it ought to be executed by the Government.

Gentlemen must not forget that in the early history of this country we went both as State governments and as a National Government into the canal-building business, and gentlemen must not forget there is not a single solitary one of those private or company canals left to-day that is not under railroad ownership.

Not one. The Chesapeake and Ohio has gone. The old Delaware Canal has gone. There is only one left that is not under railroad ownership and that is the Erie Canal system in the State of New York, and the only reason why it is left is because the people of the State of New York chose rather to make it free and to pay out of the State treasury every dollar for its construction without charging back to commerce or the people one cent of dividend or interest on the original cost. And even in the early history of the Erie Canal they charged no more than was necessary for maintenance and equipment. Now they charge nothing at all. The people of New York have taxed
